Total Reported Saved One Hundred and One.

Leaving an Lost, Five Hundred and Twenty-Five.

TOTAL LOSS OF THE TREASURE.

Statement of Henry H. Childs.

In consequence of the reprehensible conduct of the managers of some of the Southern telegraphic lines, we are unable to present as many particulars of the loss of the Central America as we had reason to anticipate. Our agent states that a full report of the disaster was ready for transmission, but that those in charge of the lines refused to keep their wires, although an arrangement that they should do so had previously been made.

The first dispatch received from Norfolk, yesterday, afforded a little additional information. By it we learned that the bark Elise had arrived in Hampton Roads, a few miles from Norfolk, Va., with fifty passengers on board; that all the officers of the Central America had perished, except JAMES M. FRAZIER, second officer, and that twenty-six women and children had been rescued by a brig, the name of which was not given. It added that the engineer, GEORGE R. ASHBY, had deserted the ship in a boat—the only desertion yet reported. Former expectations as to the loss of the treasure were confirmed. Another dispatch gave us the name of the brig that had saved twenty-six women and children and twenty men, together with some of the names. She proved to be the brig Marine, bound for the port of New-York. More cheering news arrived soon afterwards from Savannah, to the effect that the bark Sarsey had just arrived there with five of the Central America's passengers on board; which, together with the names of a few of the saved is all that had been received at 1 o'clock this morning.

NUMBER OF LOST AND SAVED.

From all sources we have the following figures of the lost and saved:

By bark Elise	50
By brig Marine	26
By bark Sarsey	5
Total saved	101

which, substracted from the whole number reported as having on board, gives the following recapitulation of lost:

Number on board Central America	576
Whole number saved	101
Total lost	475

Of the miscellaneous consignees, $350,000, we are not particularly advised; assuming, however, that all are covered either in New-York, Philadelphia and Boston.

The loss of the mails will postpone the presentation of the drafts made against the gold until about the 28th or 30th inst., on the arrival of the packet of the 5th September with the duplicates.

The most valuable life lost by the recent disaster is probably that of Lieut. WILLIAM LEWIS HERNDON, U. S. N., late Commander of the ill-starred Central America. Lieut. HERNDON was a man of gifted intellect and resolute will. Modest and retiring in manner, it required a close observer or an intimate friend to discover all the rare qualities he possessed. His courage—the calm, deliberate, enduring courage of a truly brave man—has been conspicuous on many occasions. He has been tried severely, and was never found wanting. Those who knew him well want no assurance that he never quitted his ship while there was one fellow-creature to be saved, and that, as he all was, he conducted, he stood upon her deck, as she reeled down into the depths of the ocean, unappalled himself by the calamity that has so startled the nation. We are not using the language of empty idolatry—we have Lieutenant HERNDON's great life before us and the further fact that twenty-six women and children were saved in a boat, proves conclusively that he did his duty right manfully, and, to the last, had control over himself as well as over his crew. We do not permit ourselves to hope that the gallant commander has been saved; it were impossible, except by some such miraculous interposition of Providence as that which rescued Captain LUCE, after he sunk with the Arctic's wreck.

Captain WILLIAM LEWIS HERNDON was a native of Fredericksburg, Va., and was the son of DABNEY HERNDON, Esq., a highly respected citizen of that place. He was born Oct. 25, 1813, and was, therefore, at the time of his death, 43 years of age, twenty-eight of which he had spent in the service of his country. He entered the Navy as a midshipman at the age of fifteen. His first voyage was to the Pacific, in the old frigate Guerriere. This cruise took three years. The next three years he spent in the Mediterranean, in the Constellation, and afterwards made a third cruise to the coast of Brazil. At this time he was attached to the Independence. About the time of his return the Florida war broke out, and a number of officers in the Navy volunteered for the service. Among them was young HERNDON, who was placed in command of a brig at Indian Key. With his men he often penetrated the Everglades in boats, driving the Indians from the recesses of the swamps into the arms of the troops on the shore. In this difficult service, and on the coast, he remained two years. On his return he was attached to the National Observatory at Washington, then under the charge of his brother-in-law, Lieut. MAURY. Here he remained three years. This service he found more arduous than life at sea, as he was often necessarily engaged all night in making astronomical observations. During the Mexican war he applied for orders, and was appointed to the frigate Cumberland. He proceeded to Norfolk, and had embarked, when his destination was changed. Commodore PERRY, then in the Gulf, had applied to the Department to send out to him an active and intelligent officer, who could speak the Spanish language, to be placed in command of a small steamboat to pass between the American squadron and the troops on shore, the Secretary of the Navy immediately designated Lieut. HERNDON for the post, and he was transferred to the Iris, and sailed to join Commodore PERRY. In this small vessel he remained till the close of the war, often performing tasks of much difficulty and danger, but with uniform skill and success. At the close of the war he returned to Washington, and spent another year at the Observatory.

It was in the exploration of the Amazon, during the years 1851 and 1852, that Lieut. HERNDON chiefly distinguished himself; or rather, it was in the performance of this service that he is more widely known. He was selected "for this most important and delicate duty"—so his letter of instructions ran—because "it would call for the exercise of all those high qualities and attainments that he possessed." The object of the expedition was to obtain every information relating to the valley and river of the Amazon, including the entire basin or water-shed drained by that river and its tributaries. Lieutenant HERNDON's observations were to extend not only to the present condition of that valley, with regard to the navigability of its streams, but to the number and condition, both industrial and social, of its inhabitants; their trade and products; its climate, soil and productions; and also to its capacities for cultivation, and to the character and extent of its undeveloped commercial resources, whether of the field, the forest, the river, or the mine. At the time he received these instructions, Lieutenant HERNDON was on board the Vandalia, then at Lima, in Peru, and from that point he was directed to cross the Cordillera and explore the Amazon from its source to its mouth.

Lieutenant HERNDON entered upon the duties of his new mission with spirit and enthusiasm. To prepare himself for the expedition he spent four or five months in researches in Chili and Peru. He then left the Pacific coast, and ascended to the crest of the Andes, and from thence descended the Atlantic slope until he reached the head-waters of the Amazon, which, at four thousand miles distant from its mouth, is but a muddy stream, known as the Huallaga. Lieutenant HERNDON traveled the entire distance, from the head-waters of canoe navigation to Para, in an open boat. It occupied him eleven months; and his report to the Government, embodying a faithful and modest account of his journey, should be read by every one interested in the development of the unbounded resources of the mightiest river in the world.

On his return to the United States, Lieut. HERNDON was for some months in Washington, engaged in the preparation of his work on the Amazon, which was published by the Government.

After this labor was completed he was ordered to the San Jacinto, then designed to cruise in the Baltic, during the presence there of the Allied fleets. But some accident occurring to her machinery she put into Southampton. This ship was ordered to convey Mr. SOULE, who had been forbidden to pass through France, from Calais to Spain. On the return of the San Jacinto to the United States, Lieut. HERNDON was transferred to the Potomac, under Commodore PAULDING, but was soon after placed in command of the George Law. This was about two years ago. These California steamers, carrying United States Mails, are required by law to be under the command of officers of the Navy, and Lieut. HERNDON was chosen for the responsible post. The name of the George Law was, only a few weeks ago, changed to that of the Central America, the loss of which is now mourned by thousands of hearts.

Lieut. HERNDON was married 20 years since to an estimable lady of Virginia. His wife and an only daughter survive.

He was of a slight figure, but of an intrepid spirit. He was as gentle as he was brave. In the Navy he was universally beloved. In all quarrels between officers, he was known as a peacemaker. He never made an enemy. For fifteen years he had been a member of the Episcopal Church. He often read the service on board his ship, and the humblest sailor was not committed to the deep without the burial service read over his remains by his captain.

SAFETY OF THE AGENT'S SON.

Mr. HAYMOND, the General Agent of the Company to whom the Central America belonged, was very much concerned for the safety of his son, on Thursday night. The young man graduated at the Polytechnic School, in Brooklyn, a short time ago, and left here for a pleasure trip in the Illinois, when she made her last passage out. It was expected that he would return in the Central America, and when her loss became known to his family, there was, of course, great anxiety to learn whether he had been on board, which was not relieved until late evening, when Mr. HAYMOND received a telegraphic dispatch from Mr. A. J. BABCOCK, who was on the Central America, informing him that his son was not a passenger.

GRIEF AT THE OFFICE OF THE COMPANY.

The whole of yesterday there was a large and anxious throng at the office of the Company to which the Central America belonged, at the corner of Warren and West streets. The visitors comprised mainly those who had friends on board the steamer, or expected some of their friends had taken passage in her. The greatest anxiety was to learn the exact list of passengers. One had inquiries to make about a father on board, another a mother, another a brother or a sister, and an occasional one sought information of an absent lover. Being informed that no list of names could be furnished, the anxiety of the crowd then turned itself to the particulars of the telegraphic dispatches received from time to time by Mr. ROBERTS relative to the disaster. A large portion of the crowd—such was their eagerness to learn the latest intelligence—lingered about the office till the hour of closing. The clerks gave all the information they could, and the crowd eagerly laid hold of any fact inciting to hope or encouragement.

During the afternoon Commodore VANDERBILT visited the office to inquire into the particulars of the disaster as far as it was possible to give them. He expressed his deep sympathy for the passengers on the ill-fated steamer, and commiserated the Company for the heavy pecuniary loss entailed upon them by her loss.

HOW THE NEWS WAS RECEIVED IN THE CITY.

The excitement about town, as might be expected, was very great immediately the full force of the disaster made itself felt in the street. In restaurants, counting rooms and offices, nothing was talked of but the loss of the Central America. "Why, she was the old George Law, a condemned ship, totally unseaworthy," everybody exclaimed, and very indignant were the speakers that, under a change of name, she should have been imposed upon the public as a worthy sea-going craft. "There has nothing been known like it since the sinking of the Arctic," others exclaimed. "And, in view of the loss of specie, this is even a worse calamity, occurring as it does during the present pressure on the money market."

The newspaper offices were crowded by parties who had relations or friends on board anxious to learn if any additional news had been received. The bulletins on the news offices were beseiged by excited crowds. In Wall-street the news fell with a less stunning effect than might have been expected; but still the depression of spirits, if not of stocks, was very great. It is, however, the general opinion that no immediate pressure will ensue from the large loss of specie. That such a misfortune should have occurred, so soon after the late panic, was acknowledged to have a very calamitous foreshadowing.

As the day wore on, and the news was more widely circulated, the excitement yet more largely increased, spreading to those classes which usually care little for mere news. The mothers, wives, sisters, daughters, of the crew, hurried in their everyday working apparel, and with no attempt at adornment, to the newspaper offices to learn when later intelligence was expected. "Was it true that all the crew were lost?" "If not, who were the rescued? Was this, that or the other man among them?" Until midnight and later, the TIMES office was visited by those who had relatives on board, their faces blanched with apprehension, utterly unable to repress their tears.

Generally, among men of intelligence, it was believed that the loss of life would not be so very serious as the first report indicated. We wish we could extend the hope that in that tempestuous sea, there was much probability of any large portion of the passengers or crew surviving in boats or on rafts, but we do not ourselves share that expectation.

The arrival at this port of the Empire City, due about noon to-day, will place us in possession of many important facts connected with the fate of the Central America, and of her passengers and crew.

THE RESCUE BY THE BARK ELISE.

The Hamburg bark Elise is commanded by Capt. NEILSON, and is a regular Hamburg packet. The consignee is doubtful as to the identity of this vessel with the bark named as having the forty rescued passengers of the Central America on board—and yet it is possible; the only reason against this hypothesis is the fact that she should fall in so far to the southward in coming from Hamburg. The Elise sailed from Hamburg on the 16th of August for New-York, with passengers and a cargo of general merchandise. She had on board 101 adults, 26 children and 14 infants when she left Hamburg. It is about time for her to be due at this port.

REMARKABLE COINCIDENCE.

If this is the Hamburg bark Elise, Capt. NEILSON, she is the same vessel which brought to this port a part of the passengers and crew of the ill-fated French steamer Lyonnais, having picked up sixteen of her rescued passengers in a boat, after they had been exposed nine days to the rigors of Winter and famishment. For his humane conduct on this occasion, Capt. NEILSON received handsome testimonials from the consignees, and the Consul-General of France, in the shape of money and a silver speaking-trumpet, &c.

PROMPT MOVEMENT OF THE INSURANCE COMPANIES.

We understand that at a meeting of the Underwriters in the City, it was determined, in the event of its being ascertained that the treasure by the Central America was lost, upon the receipt of proper proofs, that the Insurance Companies should hold themselves in readiness to discount at once any claims that may arise under policies which have been taken out in offices in this City. The duplicate bills of lading will be received by the steamer due on the 25th inst., so that, in case of loss, the only inconvenience by those to whom remittances were made by this conveyance, and insured in New-York, will be the delay of a few days in the realization of their means. This prompt action on the part of the Insurance Companies is deserving of all praise, as it will do much toward the alleviation of the effect of this blow upon the money market of this City.

As to the amount on board the Central America, it is believed that it is confined to the shipment from San Francisco, reported by telegraph to be about sixteen hundred thousand dollars. The correctness of the report of a large shipment at Havana is discredited. It originated from a telegraphic dispatch received by one of the large houses here, that a certain amount had been sent to them from Havana by the Catawba, arrived at Charleston, another amount by the Central America, &c., summing up in the aggregate $125,000. Now as shipments of specie for New-York are not made by way of Charleston, as it would involve the payment of double freights and double insurances, it is inferred that the remittances by the Catawba were in bills of exchange, no express intimation to the contrary having been made in the dispatch that those by the Central America are of the same character.

The larger amount of the loss will fall upon the foreign insurance companies, probably fully two-thirds, and the estimation to be made from them will form a basis upon which to draw bills of exchange, and thus stand as an equivalent for the shipment of specie to the same amount. It is believed that our own insurance companies are liable for about five hundred thousand dollars. Their losses will certainly not exceed this sum, and as the companies have all been transacting a very successful business during the year, they are abundantly able, at the present time, to meet the obligations arising from this calamity without serious inconvenience, or at all impairing their means for the successful transaction of their business as underwriters.

THE CENTRAL AMERICA NOT INSURED.

We learn from Mr. KIRBY, of MARSHALL O. ROBERTS' office, that there is no insurance on the Central America. The Company have never insured any of their steamers, preferring to save the money for themselves, which they would be obliged to expend in insurance policies and take the chances of shipwreck and other losses. Upon the specie and freight there were insurances, of course, the insurances having been effected by the shippers.

The Central America is the third steamer this Company have lost. In August, 1853, the Cherokee was burned at her wharf in this City, and was a total loss. In December, 1855, the Crescent City run on Minatitlan Reef, near Nassau, N.P., and was also a total wreck. No passengers of the latter steamer, it will be remembered, were lost, and most of the freight was saved.

A PASSENGER SAVED AFTER HAVING BEEN SIX HOURS ON THE WATER.

We are indebted to Mr. A. ARNOUX for the following dispatch from his brother-in-law, Mr. H. H. CHILDS, of this City, announcing his safety:

SAVANNAH, Tuesday, Sept. 15.

The steamer Central America sunk on the 12th. Five hundred persons went down with her. I swam six hours, and was finally rescued by the bark Ellen and transferred to the bark Sarsey, bound for this place. I have lost everything; shall leave by the next train or boat. H. H. CHILDS.

ADDITIONAL PARTICULARS.

The above lists will be materially altered when we shall have received a full report, which we expect to do, in time for our first Evening Edition.

From the Association Agent—Telegraphic Discourtesy.

WASHINGTON, Friday, Sept. 18, 1857.

At an early hour this forenoon the agent of the New-York Associated Press at Norfolk, was despatched to Hampton Roads, to collect from the rescued passengers every incident connected with the late terrible disaster, and at the same time the Petersburg and Norfolk Telegraph Line was requested to hold open at the Association's expense, until the return of the special reporter from Hampton Roads—notwithstanding which the line was closed at about the usual time (9 o'clock) this evening—thus depriving us of the possibility of obtaining any further particulars from Hampton Roads to-night.

LATE AND IMPORTANT PARTICULARS.

[BY TELEGRAPH.]

AUGUSTA, Friday, Sept. 18.

The following is the statement of HENRY H. CHILDS:

"I left Havana in the steamship Central America for New-York on Sept. 8. The weather was delightful, and the sea calm on the passage from Aspinwall. On the afternoon of the day of sailing from Havana fresh westerly breezes sprung up. On the following morning the wind blew very strong, the gale continuing to increase in violence as the day advanced. At night there was no abatement in the fury of the gale, and it commenced raining in torrents. On Thursday it blew a hurricane, the sea running very high.

On Friday the storm raged fearfully. At 11 o'clock in the morning of this day it was first known among the passengers that the steamer had sprung aleak and was making water fast. A line of men was immediately formed, and they went to work bailing out the water from the engine rooms, the fires having already been extinguished. We gained on the water so much that we were able to get up steam again, but we held it but a few minutes, and then it subsided forever. Bailing continued, however, and was kept up in all parts of the ship until she finally went down.

During Friday night the water gained gradually, but all on board being in pretty good spirits, they worked to the best of their ability, feeling that when the morning came, they possibly might speak some vessel, and thus be saved. The fatal Saturday came at last, but brought nothing but increased fury in the gale. Still we worked on, and at about 2 o'clock in the afternoon the storm lulled a little, and the clouds broke away. Hope was renewed, and all now worked like giants. At 4 P. M. we spied a sail, and fired guns and placed our flag at half-mast. It was seen, and the brig Marine of Boston bore down upon us. We then considered safety certain.

She came near us and we spoke to her and told our condition. She laid by about a mile distant, and we, in the only three boats saved, placed all the women and children, and they were safely put on board the brig. As evening was fast approaching we discovered another sail which responded to our call and came near us. Captain HERRON told our condition and asked them to lay by and send a boat as we had none left. She promised to do so, but that was the last we saw of her except at a distance which grew greater and greater every moment.

At 7 o'clock we saw no possibility of keeping afloat much longer, although we all felt that if we could do so until morning all would be saved. In a short time a heavy sea for the first time broke over the upper deck of the vessel, and then all hope faded away. Life-preservers were now supplied to all, and we sent up two rockets, when a tremendous sea swept over us, and the steamer in a moment went down. I think some four hundred or four hundred and fifty souls were launched upon the ocean, at the mercy of the waves. The storm at this time had entirely subsided. We all kept near together, and went as the waves took us.

There was nothing, or very little, said except that each one cheered his fellow-comrade on. Courage was thus kept up for two or three hours, and I think for this space of time none had drowned but those who could not swim because exhausted. After this, gradually one by one passed away to eternity. The hope that boats would be sent to us from two vessels we had spoken soon fled from us, and our trust was alone in Providence—"and what better trust could you or I ask for?"

I saw my comrades sink fast, and at 1 o'clock that night I was nearly alone upon the ocean, some two hundred miles from land. I heard, however, shouts from all that could do so, that were not far from me, but I could not see them. Within an hour from this time I saw a vessel, which I judged to be about one mile from me. Taking fresh courage I struck out for the vessel, and reached it when nearly exhausted, and they drew me on board of it by ropes. It proved to be a Norwegian bark from Belize, Honduras, bound for Falmouth, England. I found on board of her some three of my comrades, and at 9½ o'clock next morning we had 40 noble fellows on board, and these are all I know of having been saved.

We strayed about the place until we thought that all alive had been rescued, and then set sail. We found the bark short of provisions and the crew living on gruel. We had some tea and coffee to refresh ourselves, and at noon on Sunday we spoke the American bark (the Sarsey) bound for Savannah, which supplied us with provisions, and took five of us on board. Our names are:—

James Howes, of San Francisco.

Samuel W. Loek, of Maine.

Adolph Frederick, of San Francisco.

Henry H. Childs, of New-York.

The Norwegian bark set sail for Charleston with the remainder of the forty-nine passengers, whose names unfortunately I cannot give. The few that I have recollect are as follows:

Capt. Badger, of Baltimore.

Mr. Frazier, Second Officer.

E. P. Brown, of Sacramento.

Billy Birch, of the San Francisco Minstrels.

A. J. Eaton, of San Francisco.

—— Fletcher, of Augusta, Me.

There is a lad saved some seven years old, whose mother was with the other ladies placed on board the Brig.

P. S.—There were three passengers that got into boats, that saved the women and children, who are known to me. Their names are

Mr. Priest, of Long Island.

Mr. Jones, of ——.

A TICKET-SWINDLER ARRESTED AND HELD TO BAIL IN TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS.—Last Friday we published in the TIMES an account of a ticket-swindling transaction by which an old man named ROBERT HALL was cheated out of $17 by purchasing a passage ticket to Liverpool from FRANCIS FOWLER, the keeper of a "booking-office" on the corner of Chambers and West-streets, and that FOWLER was arrested, returned the money and was held to bail in the sum of $250. Not at all discouraged by his ill success, he immediately returned to his office to wait for fresh victims. On Thurday FOWLER was the second time brought before the Recorder on a charge of swindling NATHANIEL MERRILL out of $25, by inducing him to deposit that amount with FOWLER as a bonus or surety that he would purchase a ticket for California. The following affidavit explains the circumstances fully:

City and County of New-York, ss.—Nathaniel Merrill, being duly sworn, says, that he arrived in this city from New Hampshire on or about the 14th day of September instant, for the purpose of taking the steamer Central America and going to California; that on or about the same day, this same deponent went to an office on the northwest corner of Chambers and West streets, in this City, to purchase tickets for himself and wife for passage to California, with the said steamer, which is advertised to sail on the 21st inst., from this port to California; that said office has large signs hung out and bills posted and has all the appearance of being the regular office for the sale of tickets by said steamer for the 21st instant, and as the office of the United States Steamship Mail Company; that this deponent, while at said office, at the time aforesaid, met a person in charge of said office, unknown to this deponent, but, as deponent was afterwards informed, called by the name of Frank Fowler, which said person, called Frank Fowler, informed this deponent that said office was the regular office of said company for the sale of tickets to California for the steamer Central America advertised as aforesaid; deponent therefore inquired of said Fowler the price of tickets by said steamer, and said Fowler informed this deponent that the price of tickets for the first cabin passage was $600 for deponent and wife; this deponent further says that said Fowler thereupon demanded of deponent the sum of $25 in advance for a ticket, which said sum of $25 this deponent paid over to said Fowler and received a receipt from the said Fowler therefor; the deponent further says, that he was induced to pay to him, said Fowler, the said sum of $25 upon the representations made to this deponent by said Fowler, that said office was the regular office for the sale of tickets for the steamer of the 21st instant; that thereafter this deponent was informed by the regular agent of said company, who was and is the only authorized person to sell said tickets, that said ticket purchased or agreed to be purchased and the receipt for tickets were spurious, and that said Fowler had no authority to sell said tickets, and was not the agent of said company; this deponent then went to the office of said Fowler and demanded back the payment of $25—the amount he, deponent, had advanced to said Fowler, for said spurious tickets or receipt, and thereupon said Fowler required of deponent the receipt which said Fowler had given to deponent; deponent then handed said receipt to said Fowler, and thereupon said Fowler tore up said receipt and abused this deponent, and threatened deponent with a suit at law if deponent did not pay him the balance, namely the sum of $575; this deponent further says, that said Fowler represented to deponent that he was the regular agent of said Steamship Company, when in fact, said Fowler was not nor is he the agent thereof; that the representations made by said Fowler to deponent were false and fraudulent, and done for the purpose of cheating and defrauding said deponent. Deponent further says, that he would not have parted with his money to said Fowler had he known that said Fowler's representations were false, or that said Fowler was not the agent of said company. That this deponent has paid the sum of $550, which is the regular price for a first cabin passage to California for the steamer of the 21st instant; and further deponent saith not. N. MERRILL.

Sworn before me this 17th day of September, 1857. JAMES M. SMITH, Jr., Recorder.

The Recorder again admitted FOWLER to bail—bail this time in the sum of $2,000. Fowler was bailed by a member of the old Police.

WASHINGTON, Friday, Sept. 18.

The Administration is determined to enforce the neutrality laws, and to-day took the military steps for that purpose. In addition to information having been received of the fitting out of three several expeditions, viz: at New-York, New-Orleans, and Mobile, for the retravasion of Nicaragua, under the leadership of General WALKER, intelligence from an official quarter has come to hand of another expedition, having its centre in, if not nearly disciplined, combined to Texas, for the invasion of Mexico, which is supposed, the release of the state of Tamaulipas. Gen. SAM HOUSTON is, by the reports received, designated as its leader.

To-day the form of instructions was prepared by Executive authority, and copies of which will be dispatched to-morrow to the various United States Marshals and District-Attorneys on the seaboard, as well as to officers of the Army and Navy, to use all lawful means at their command to prevent such expeditions leaving the United States for the invasion of any country with which we are at peace; in other words, enjoining them to strictly enforce the neutrality laws. Letter from Lieut. Gov. Selden.

To the Editor of the Rochester Democrat:

SIR: My attention has just been called to an article in the Rochester Union and Advertiser, of last evening, quoting an article from the Buffalo Republic in relation to the action of a Committee of Democratic Republicans, which lately met in this city; and I beg leave to say that no resolutions relating to the action of the State Administration, either denunciatory or otherwise, were either passed or contemplated by that Committee; nor was anything said, in any hearing, denunciatory of the Administration, by any member of the Committee. Some members of the character described in the article alluded to were present to the Committee, by a person not a member of it, but they were neither [illegible] or received, or in any way acted upon, by the Committee or by any member of it. If the article referred myself only whatever might have been its character, it would not have been noticed by me; but as it is a matter in which the public may be interested, it is proper that the error should be corrected.

Yours, respectfully, H. R. SELDEN.

The Constitutional Convention—Permanent Organization—President's Speech.

[SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE NEW-YORK TIMES.]

LECOMPTON, K. T., Tuesday, Sept. 8, 1857.

The Convention reassembled this morning at 10 o'clock. The interval since the adjournment on the previous day had been spent in assiduous and energetic efforts by the friends of both the candidates for the Presidency, to influence the members in favor of their respective nominees. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

Mr. HUGH S. MOORE, of Leavenworth, submitted a report of the Committee on Credentials, which merely recommended that the members named on the list furnished by the Territorial Secretary, as having been duly elected, were entitled to seats in the Convention, with the exception of the substitution of JOHN W. RANSDELL for G. W. SWEENEY of Atchison, resigned, and the substitution of the name of WM. CHRISTISON of Leavenworth, which had been written WM. CHRISTIAN.

The report was received and adopted.

Resolved, That the members of the Constitutional Convention be required to take an obligation of fidelity to the Constitution of the United States and to the organic act of the Territory known as the Kansas-Nebraska Act, and faithfully to discharge the duties imposed upon them as delegates to this Convention, and that the oath be administered by a legally authorized officer of justice.

Mr. STEWART proposed to strike out the words "of justice," which led to a sharp debate, in the course of which the powers of the Governor and Territorial Secretary to administer such oath were canvassed, and the section of the organic act referring to the subject was read and commented on. It appeared that that section only granted such power to the Governor and the Secretary in the case of civil officers, and as nobody claimed that the members of the Convention were civil officers, the resolution passed in its original form.

It was then resolved that the Convention proceed to elect permanent officers.

JOHN MCKOWN, of Calhoun County, nominated for President Gen. JOHN GARMON. The Judge pronounced his nomination by a few brief eulogistic remarks, expressive of his sense of the high service rendered by Mr. GARMON to his country and the Democracy, both in Kansas and out of it, by his unflinching opposition and successful resistance to the Republican Party in Illinois.

Mr. T. J. KEY offered the name of Major VANDERSLICE, but that gentleman declined on the ground that there were better men available. In turn Major VANDERSLICE proposed Gen. EASTIN, of the Leavenworth Herald.

The General declared that he had never been a candidate for the office, and if his name had been used as such by his friends, it was without his consent. If the Convention voluntarily elected him President, he should esteem it as the highest honor to which he could aspire, but for the reason assigned by Major VANDERSLICE, he preferred to decline the nomination.

The vote was then taken with the following result:

For John Calhoun	27
For Rush Elmore	12
For Hector J. Eastin	6
Whole number of votes cast	45
Necessary to an election	23

A Committee of three was appointed to conduct Mr. CALHOUN to the chair. On taking the chair, he addressed the Convention as follows:

THE PRESIDENT'S SPEECH.

GENTLEMEN: For the very flattering expression of your sentiments in conferring on me the office of President of this Convention, you have my profound acknowledgments. I am fully aware of the importance of the position which you have assigned to me; and I think I am also fully aware of the importance of the mission which has brought us together on this occasion. I know well that it will be utterly impossible for me to perform the duties of the office to which I have been called unless I have the hearty cooperation of friends around and about me. To fulfill these duties—to discharge them to the extent of my ability, I will, it is almost unnecessary for me to say, exert my utmost efforts. Indeed, you have the assurance of that in the fact of my having accepted the position conferred upon me. I may add, gentlemen, that this is no ordinary occasion. The meeting of a Convention to frame the Constitution of a new State is, under ordinary circumstances, a matter of no great interest. The young State may spring into being and reach great prominence in the National Congress and in the National history, but still there will be but the ordinary course of the States of this Union. We meet then to-day under extraordinary circumstances, and I presume that every member of this Convention has come here to-day to discharge the duties fully impressed with the high responsibilities that attach to them, from their importance not only to Kansas but to the Union of which we propose to become a member. A Constitution wisely framed and properly, fully, and honestly approved by the true citizens of Kansas, will settle all the difficulties that surround us, and that have been surrounding us, and will at once restore harmony to the Union. I may remark here, without, perhaps, doing injustice to the feelings of any honest, and true lover of his country, that the formation of such a Constitution prevented and crushes to earth a party that is seeking, by every means within its power, to obtain ascendancy, even at the cost of the sacrifice of the Union itself. It is not merely Kansas, it is the Union, that is interested. The action of this Convention involves not merely the interest of the people here, but of the people throughout the Republic. One of the greatest issues to be resolved by the Convention is whether the people of this Territory shall have power to control its Government. To make a Constitution is but a small affair. Not a single principle will be embraced in the Constitution to be framed during this session, that has not been already incorporated in other Constitutions. The old original Constitutions of the American States contained some errors, which have since been corrected by the popular sentiment, and whenever old Constitutions have been revised and altered or new Constitutions framed, they have had expressed on them, the principle that the people have the right to rule, and shall rule in all matters; that they shall elect not merely governors and presidents, and the various officers that are usually elected by the people, but also judges. These improvements have been made within the last quarter of a century, and are expressed not only in the Constitutions of such of the old States as have held Conventions within that time, but also in those of the new States that have since come into the Union. There are, therefore, no new principles to be laid down in these Conventions to frame the organic law of the people of Kansas assume the right of governing themselves, and it is in the power of no difficulty, not merely here in Kansas, but throughout the Union. That difficulty arises from a different declaration. I think the course of the proceedings of this Convention over which I have the honor to preside, ought to give to the world the assurance that their deliberations will result in a speedy and final settlement of difficulties here, but in the settlement of the question as to whether this Union shall continue, and as to whether that party which is employing its treasures, its men, and its resources to keep this an open question till the next presidential election shall succeed, or the Union stand, that party goes by the board. If that party triumphs, this Union cannot live. The high and responsible duty therefore devolves upon us to take in our hands the organic act of this Territory, and, acting upon it, fashion it to be presented to the Congress of the United States, constitution framed in such a manner and having such an endorsement as that we may not merely petition for admission to the Union, but demand that we shall be admitted. I trust that wise counsels will prevail here. I am confident from my knowledge of the members of the Convention that such will be the case. There may be excitement of feeling. There may be particular points on which individual members will plant themselves, but still I trust that every member of this Convention will bring to bear in the judgment of all issues that may be presented, that calm, sober deliberation becoming statesmen who have met together to frame a Government, who have met together to lay the foundations on which a great people shall have to rest. I am fully confident that you will be and are fitted to the occasion. And, Gentlemen, I can give you the assurance that in all your actions that will be just and proper to Kansas—just, proper and right to the principles of the Government under which we live, and which leads to the prosperity of Kansas and to the preservation of the Union—you shall have my full, hearty and honest cooperation. I again tender to you my thanks for the honor which you have conferred on me. Gentlemen, it is higher honor to stand here to-day the presiding officer of this Convention, than to all any other position that the American people could confer upon me. [Enthusiastic cheering.]

There being no opposition, a motion was made and carried to elect Mr. MOORE by acclamation, which was done accordingly.

Mr. HUGHES of Lecompton and Mr. NOWMAN of Jefferson, the chief and Assistant Secretaries pro tem., were selected to fill those offices permanently.

Mr. P. H. CAREY, after a brief discussion which had almost grown political, was elected Reporter over Mr. SCULLY of Leavenworth, late of the New-Orleans Picayune, by a vote of 29 to 16.

Mr. GEO. R. CRAMER of Lecompton was elected Sergeant-at-Arms by acclamation.

Col. COOKE was appointed doorkeeper.

A motion, by Judge ELMORE, to the effect that reporters be admitted to the floor of the Convention, was passed, after Mr. JENKINS had spoken against it, on the ground of there being no room for them.

Judge ELMORE also read a certificate from the Territorial Secretary in reference to certain returns of a census made by the inhabitants of Anderson County, after the time appointed by law, and when no apportionment could be made, and the receipt by that officer of certain election returns, purporting to state the particulars of the election of members to this Convention, and based on the census already mentioned.

This was referred to a Committee of five.

The proposition was vociferously voted down.

Mr. WELLS, of Douglas, asked leave to explain his vote. He had opposed the motion, not from any dislike whatever to the gentleman proposed to be appointed, but because he wished it amended by appointing each of the ministers resident in Lecompton to officiate as Chaplain in turn. He had since understood, however, that there was no other clergyman resident in Lecompton.

Mr. JENKINS strenuously urged the adoption of the resolution. He knew that their failure to appoint a Chaplain would be contrary to the universal practice in such cases, and that their refusal to do so would be taken advantage of to their prejudice all over the North. There was nothing to be ashamed of in showing that they were not averse to Christian practice; and, besides, the thing was but a formality, after all, for, if nobody wanted to hear the opening prayer, they could stay away.

The motion was put again, and carried, with but few dissentients.

After the appointment of Messrs. Key, Jenkins, Moore, Little and A. W. Jones, as a Committee on Rules and Regulations, the Convention adjourned till Wednesday morning, at 10 o'clock.

From the Plains, I have lately been put in possession of authentic details of the recent miserably-managed encounter of the First Regiment of Cavalry, under command of Colonel SUMNER, with the Cheyenne Indians, on Solomon's Fork, on the 29th of August last, and of the terrible sufferings to which the soldiers have been needlessly exposed since they left Fort Leavenworth. This engagement (if it can so be called) with the Indians is said to have offered one of the most splendid chances of a thorough destruction of that bold, cunning and blood-thirsty tribe, that the history of the warfare can furnish, and the opportunity is regarded as not more admirable than the failure to take advantage of it is considered as unsoldierly and ridiculous. About five hundred Indians, splendidly mounted and armed, were observed boldly approaching over the plain. From their movements, it was obvious that they meant to surround the troops and slaughter them to a man. The Colonel ordered the soldiers into line, and dispatched a couple of companies to the right and left, to prevent the Indians from turning their flank. A body of three hundred infantry had been left several miles behind, and the artillery, under command of Lieutenant BAYARD, which had preceded the infantry, and was anxious to share in the engagement, was ordered to halt till the foot reserve came up, whilst the cavalry continued to advance in single line, awaiting the attack. The Indians came nearer—so near that as old PUTNAM said, the soldiers could "see the whites of their eyes." The Colonel ordered a charge with sabres. The order was obeyed. The troops rushed on the Indians with "empty" sabres, as they say in derision, in hand, and 2,100 good charges of powder and ball in their revolvers and carbines. The Indians turned and fled. Some of the soldiers, in the thoughtless excitement of the pursuit, were thrown off their horses. The retreating Indians observed this, turned, and showed fight; and it was in these hand to hand conflicts that some eight or nine of the savages and two soldiers were killed. The event is regarded as a disastrous oversight by both the officers and men of the regiment, who are confident that if ordered to fire on the Cheyennes the massacre would have been immense. The only useful result of it is the seizure of the Indian stores which were appropriated or destroyed, and the burning of their encampment. One officer and seven men were wounded, but have since recovered. Of course no estimate can be formed of the number of Indians wounded, but it is supposed to be considerable.

About a fortnight ago, orders from the Department were sent to Col. SUMNER to dispatch four out of the six companies under his command to Utah, in charge of Major SEDGWICK. The heartless cruelty of this proceeding can hardly be appreciated by any one who has not himself been a partaker of the oppressive fatigues to which these poor fellows have been exposed during the last four months. Marching bootless and stockingless, for 1,300 miles, over a bare, sandy waste, destitute of water and sparse in verdure, the soles of their feet worn to the quick and sloughing into putrid holes with the poisoned ivy which grows everywhere over the plain, their horses worn to skelstons, and more in need of somebody to help them along than able to help anybody themselves, obliged to live on tough ox meat, without salt, pepper, bread or vegetables, with bare heads, bare backs and empty stomachs, these miserable and gallant fellows are ordered off on a march of 1,300 miles to Utah which they cannot reach before the depth of Winter! Oh, the Circumlocution office!

This evening I had the pleasure of an introduction to Captain STURGIS, on his way from the Plains to Fort Leavenworth on a seven days' leave to see his wife and family. He was accompanied by Major MILLER, agent for the Cheyenne, Arrapahoe, and other Indians.

The captain is one of the most thorough-going, efficient and popular officers in the service, but his condition when I saw him would rather astonish people whose notion of a military man is that of a walking machine, buttoned, buckled, plated, chained, with an immense display of glittering buttons, heavy epaulettes, extenuating leather stock, brilliant boots, rattling sword, bushy whiskers and a slender waist.

SAMUEL B. FOSS, Deputy Sheriff of Douglas County, has been held in $2,000 bail to answer the charge of having stabbed young BAILEY here a few nights ago.

A difficulty has just occurred between BAILEY's lawyer, one Judge STEVENS, of Ohio, and Mr. T. B. STKES, of Mississippi, who conducted the defence. STEVENS had made some remark during the progress of the examination personally offensive to STKES, and the latter demanded an apology. Meeting subsequently at the Post-Office, the misunderstanding was renewed, and STKES made several lunges at STEVENS with a cane, whereupon the latter retreated. The matter is not expected to go any further. P. H. C.

A KENTUCKY COUNTY FAIR.

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

LEXINGTON, KY., Thursday, Sept. 10, 1857.

When criticising the meagreness of the show of Kentucky animals at the National Agricultural Fair, in one of my former letters, I gave you notice that I should go to Lexington for the purpose of verifying my suspicion that the fine stock was still in Kentucky, but sectional jealousy had militated against its exhibition at Louisville. Now, "scit, vidi" that I was not wrong, and I purpose giving you the results of my observations.

Oh, farmers of the East, you who complacently go about ten-acre fields—unprotected by a single tree—on which the "County Fair" is held; who admiringly look upon a half dozen fair milch cows of native breed, a dozen yoke of steers more or less remarkable for ponderosity, a few pens of hogs and sheep, and a sprinkling of mowing machines, plows, seed drills and cultivators, as the very acme of Fair-making, take a trip to the "blue grass region" of Kentucky next year at this time, and see a County Fair as it is a Fair! I supposed that in my own Empire State, and in the Eastern States, we did occasionally make agricultural exhibitions in our counties that were of superior excellence, but this visit convinces me of my error.

The Kentucky Agricultural and Mechanical Association is now celebrating its Eighth Annual Fair, with highly favorable auspices. The Fair grounds, embracing a tract of about fifty acres, are, in fact, an undulating woodland pasture, being carpeted with the soft, thick and brilliant-colored grass, which has given its name to this region, and studded thickly with groups of majestic oaks, hickory and beech trees. From the entrance gates the ground rises gradually to a plateau of considerable extent, upon which is erected an amphitheatre building, inclosing an arena of two hundred and ten feet in diameter, and costing $12,000 to build. In architectural appearance it is perhaps fully equal to that at Louisville, but the Judges' Pagoda in the centre of the ring is not furnished with a tall flag-pole, and thus has a somewhat "squat" appearance. The arena is carpeted with a thick turf of blue grass, closely mown; and thus the spectators are not annoyed with the clouds of dust that would otherwise be aroused by the hoofs of the horses and cattle, and the soothing color of the grass prevents the unpleasant effect upon the eyes which the reflection of sun-light from dirt would occasion. To stand upon the outer promenade of the amphitheatre and look upon the encircling wall of people inside the building, and upon the moving groups, the social picnics under the trees, the tethered horses, and hundreds of carriages without, is a scene not soon to be forgotten. The gladiatorial days of ancient Rome are recalled in the one case, and the charming fêtes champêtres of the sprightly French and Germans find their prototype in the other. Somewhat unwisely, I think, the President and managers of the Fair have permitted the exhibition of fat women, bearded ladies and such like monstrosities upon the grounds, and it is wonderful to see the sums taken by these shows in a single day. One man had a box well filled with bank bills, gold pieces and silver coin to the amount of about two hundred and fifty dollars. For the sake of acquiring knowledge of sundry of "the most wonderful things in the world," I successively attended the lévees of a fat woman, who informed me that "they all gives in as how she's the biggest woman as ever traveled;" a Mexican Giant, under whose extended arm the reporter of the TIMES easily passed without touching; an infant drummer, whose turbulent performance awakened the hope that he may die before making any "deeper soundings;" a "Swiss Warbler," whose marvelous imitations of birds and pigs may be attributed to a cheap bird-whistle held between his teeth; and the "Bearded Woman," the envy of youths who as yet have not been called to undergo the "sweet pains" occasioned by the reluctant edge of the razor!

At noon-time the audience leave their seats on the amphitheatre benches and flock to the shade of the trees to partake of dinner. Here we see the real Kentucky picnics. At the foot of some tall oak tree you will see a group of friends and relatives seated upon the grass; the colored servants spread the table-cloth upon the ground, and on it arrange the tempting "morsels" and "drops," which by their flavor, solidity and liquidity, are destined to fortify the physical and spiritual man. Here and there are seen tables of more ambitious gentlemen, which are laden with all the materials for a bountiful collation; and scattered about promiscuously, are single individuals and groups of two or three, eating their moderate meal with infinite relish. The joyous laugh and chatting of merry voices, the gambols of children, the clatter of knives and forks, the popping of champagne corks and clink of glasses, the bright green grass, painted here yellow by the gold of the sunshine, and there black by the shadow of leaves, and a bright blue sky overhead, all go to make up a picture of rural enjoyment of a most charming nature.

Strolling about the stables and stalls, arranged on the outskirts of the grounds, we see the grooms preparing their animals for exhibition. Carefully curried and brushed is the young colt; his legs and hoofs are frequently washed with cold water; his mane and tail are combed and brushed until they lie as sleek as the hair of a dandy. The bulls and cows are curried down, and rubbed with cloths until "each particular hair," instead of "standing on end like quills," &c., is caused to lie in friendly proximity upon the animal's hide, and take on a gloss that gives back the sunlight like a glass window. Criticism is freely indulged in by the rival grooms; and each one seems confident of winning the prize, and is as much interested in doing it as if he were real owner, and not a mere attendant of the animal.

The show of cattle is, in many respects, superior to that of the National Fair at Louisville; and, this being the case, the public, very naturally, ask why they were compelled to undertake long journeys to see a display of stock which was promised to be superior to all precedent, and find themselves grievously disappointed. The belief was awakened that the talk about Kentucky stock, and Kentucky breeders, was all exaggeration; for we could not understand how any considerations of a local pride could permit men to so far forget the honor of their State as to allow their guest, the National Society, to depart from them dissatisfied with the cooperation of her stock-raising citizens. This is the case, however. There seems to be between the Louisville and Lexington districts a strong rivalry in agricultural matters; and the latter purposely retrained from sending stock to the Fair of the former. Gentlemen from Lexington present at Louisville, told us to come to their Fair, if we wanted to see real Kentucky stock; and although surprised and mortified to hear so unpatriotic sentiments, we have come here and learned that it is indeed true. As an American citizen, I deeply regret it, because of the erroneous impression it has caused in the minds of the members of the Press and private citizens from foreign countries who were present at the National Show; and, secondly, because of the vexation and expense it has caused to hundreds of our own citizens from distant States, who came to Louisville purposely to see the Kentucky stock.

This is especially the country of Durham, or "Short Horn" cattle, and the specimens exhibited in the ring, with the exception of the ring of aged bulls, were of the finest description. The calves, yearlings, and two-year olds, are said to have never been surpassed. Of fat bullocks the display was not large, but very fine, but the spayed heifers were not only enormous in size but more numerous. But very little attention is given here to the Herefords, Devons or other breeds, and, as might naturally be expected, the display is very meagre. The only Herefords on exhibition are those of WM. H. SOTHAM, of Oswego, N. Y., who has had the hardihood to bring his lean animals directly into the region where reside his great rivals, the CLAYS. Whilst we must somewhat admire the courage, it seems a rather foolhardy undertaking to bring a herd of Herefords direct from the pasture without preparatory fattening to convince Kentuckians of their superiority to the cherished Short Horns. The Herefords strode after their grooms in lonely majesty and astonishing leanness, and were greeted by the derisive smiles of the audience. I felt sorry for SOTHAM, for in England the Herefords are of equal rank with the Short Horns, and with the same chances here would bear equal honors. The bull Charles II., of the herd, was sold to-day for $300, which is the highest price that Mr. S. has asked for him.

Mr. R. A. ALEXANDER shows only three animals of his immense herd, because he so invariably carries off the prizes that he is unwilling by exhibiting his stock in his own county to debar others from competition, and thus injure the show. Of some of his animals I gave you a description in a former letter, and I shall not enter more into detail, for his stock will need a separate letter to do it justice. Suffice it to say, in a word, that Mr. ALEXANDER owns 2,800 acres of land in Woodford County, 350 in Scott County, and over 10,000 on Green River. His imported cattle and their progeny are fully worth $150,000. His land over $300,000. His stud of race-horses and mares $50,000. His trotting stock $15,000. He is direct rightful successor to the Earldom of Stirling, in Scotland. From his estate of Airdrie he has an income of $75,000 per annum, and from his American possessions equally as much. His last sale of cattle amounted to $50,000; and yet, with all his princely fortune, he is a most unassuming and kind-hearted gentleman. Resigning all pretensions to rank and society, he prefers the unostentatious life of a Kentucky farmer and stock-breeder; and you may imagine my surprise to find his mansion-house, in which I slept last night, actually inferior, in outward show, to that on my own farm. He takes a great interest in the development of the agriculture of Kentucky, and is foremost in assisting in maintaining the County Fair.

Dr. E. WARFIELD, of Lexington, takes the first prize for old bulls, and first for two-year old heifers. Mr. BEDFORD's animal takes the red-ribbon in the latter class.

A three-year old steer of Mr. ISAAC SHELBY's, weighs about 2,500 pounds, and is of great beauty of development.

The rings of working oxen embrace about twenty yoke of cattle, and are very beautiful, but not superior to those raised in the valley of the Connecticut. It is amusing to see these fine teams driven by a rope tied to their horns, in addition to the customary whip; but it is quite a general custom in the country, and, like an old habit, difficult to remove.

Amongst the guests, I have been pleased to meet the famous New-York breeder of fine stock, Col. EDWIN G. MORGAN of Westchester, also SAM'L THORNE of Dutchess county, who stands next to Mr. ALEXANDER in the Short Horn world, THOMAS RICHARDSON, Esq., of West Farms, whose bull stood second at the National Show at Philadelphia only to THORNE's $10,000 bull Neptune; Hon. HENRY WAGER of Rome, Ex-President of the New-York State Society, and the famous American Barrow-net, (Sir,) BEN. PERLEY POORE. The Vice-President, Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, is here too, for Lexington is his home, and his tall form towers above others in the crowd. He has a noble face, and a deep, blue eye; his face is the face of one born to be a ruler, and he has a heartiness in the grasp of his hand that makes you feel as if he was a friend at once. THOMAS D. JONES, the celebrated sculptor has his studio at the Broadway House here, and to-day showed me a portrait bust of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, to which he is just putting the finishing touches. The face beams with life and intelligence, and the likeness is so remarkably good that, although I had never seen Mr. B. before, I at once singled him out in a crowd from his resemblance to JONES' bust.

The prizes are given in the rings here by the plan which is used by some physicians to determine the nature of a disease, called "reasoning by exclusion." The physician examines attentively the symptoms of his patient, and, endeavoring to individualize the malady, proceeds, step by step, excluding certain diseases, until he arrives at the one which most perfectly accounts for the condition of the patient before him; so the Kentucky judges examine animal after animal, and as they rapidly cast their eye on the competitors exclude first this one, then that, until the strife is narrowed down to two or three, and then the preference is given because of the superior claims of individual developments. It is highly interesting to see the breathless expression with which the spectators, men, women and children, await the decisive verdict. The hum of conversation ceases as the moment for deciding upon some particularly valuable animal arrives, the countenances are all eagerly turned towards the jury, the promenaders on the upper walk pause for a moment, the men who have laid their wagers upon the result stand ready to groan or cheer, as the case may be, and when the ring-master leaves the band of judges approaches the victorious animal and ties upon his horns—or, if a horse, upon his headstall—the blue ribbon of the first prize. Then cheer after cheer bursts forth upon the air, and the busy voices of ten thousand spectators mingle in confused din. Shouts of "Take it off the scrrel," "Put it on the hay," "Hurrah for the blue bridle," and "Give it to the long-tailed black," arise from all parts of the amphitheatre, and the bets which have been made upon the result are settled upon the spot.

I never saw so much betting at a horse-race as is done here upon the chances of cattle, horses, sheep, colts, calves, or anything else brought in for examination. The whole upper seat of the amphitheatre seemed covered with young men betting upon the rings. Scores of them would be walking from one group to another, their hands full of bills, to lay wagers with whoever they could find willing to take a risk. The fact is that the vice of gambling pervades the whole of Kentucky, and seems to centre in its strength at Lexington. The rooms at the Phœnix Hotel, and even its public office, are thronged with gambling groups. Excessive quantities of "old Bourbon" whisky are drunk by young and old men, and nearly every man carries a concealed revolver or knife. At the Broadway House an altercation between two individuals since I commenced this letter has ended in a fight, and one of the parties at once drew a bowie knife, with a blade full ten inches long, and rushed at his antagonist with the intention of taking his life. The crowd interfered, and the knife was wrested from him by some one, and handed to me, as I stood behind the office counter, with a request that it might be concealed from the infuriated owner. Thus deprived of his weapon, and the other being unarmed, the combatants were separated, but only with threats of a bloody termination to the quarrel at a future time.

I have been struck with the profusion of really great-looking men at the Fair of Kentucky. You may single out any group of twenty, and in it you will be sure to find two or three, who, in stature, physical development, or expression of countenance, bear testimony to the manliness and royalty of their nature. It seems as if Kentucky were educating a race of Kings, from which to supply the world. The men are more remarkable than the women—that is, they strike the stranger as being more distingué. Examination into the causes producing this peculiar physical development will disclose the direct influence of the circumstances by which the early settlers of Kentucky were surrounded. It is their pioneer life, their clearing up of forests, their wars with Indians, their strife with wild beasts, that has stamped this peculiar type of manliness upon the sons of Kentucky, and the contrast between them and the more avaricious and incubative countenances of the New-England States must be apparent to every observer.

I go hence to one of the greatest wonders of our wonderful country, and, after a careful examination and exploration of its mysterious depths, shall send you an account of the Mammoth Cave. O.

MASSACHUSETTS POLITICS.

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

BOSTON, Thursday, Sept. 17, 1857.

Since I wrote you last we have had three State Conventions in Boston: the two American Conventions, on the 10th, which finally resolved themselves into one and nominated the same candidates; and the Democratic Convention, which was held yesterday.

The action of the Americans in placing Gov. GARDNER in nomination, has completed the second stage of that gentleman's purpose, the first being his speech at Dorchester, by which he formally placed himself in opposition to Mr. BANKS. The third is less under his control, and will be decided by the votes on the 2d of November. He is on the course, but the people have the matter entirely in their hands.

The Gardner Americans nominated two of the candidates whose names are on the Banks American ticket, namely: Mr. CLIFFORD, for Attorney-General; and Mr. RANDALL, for State Auditor. Mr. CLIFFORD's election may be put down as almost a sure thing, as he will receive the votes of men outside of all parties by which he is nominated. Mr. RANDALL will receive a good vote, and probably be elected; but his chances are not quite so good as those of Mr. CLIFFORD.

The "Straight Republicans," as they call themselves, will hold a Convention on the 30th of September. Should they place Mr. PHILLIPS' name on their ticket—he is the regular Republican for Attorney-General—and should their vote be anything like what they expect it to be, he may be chosen; but it must be allowed that his prospects are not altogether so bright as his friends would wish to have them.

Mr. BAKER, who presided over the first Gardner Convention, was, until a very recent period, a supporter of Mr. BANKS. The friends of Mr. BANKS say that he never would have changed if that gentleman had not resolved to hold on to his Congressional seat until after the event of the State election shall have been decided. He made a strong Anti-Slavery speech to the Americans, a speech more redolent of extreme Republican views than any that has been made in the course of the campaign. This speech offended the Hunkers, who wish to support Governor GARDNER, but who have not given in their adhesion to his party, their object being simply the defeat of Mr. BANKS. They do not wish to have to swallow a dose of "Abolitionism" preparatory to working for the Governor's benefit. Then, Mr. BAKER has been foremost in all the Anti-Slavery action of his party for the last three years, so that his being placed in the fore-part of the Gardner line of battle is not calculated to please men whose views are of an ultra conservative nature.

For about a week past the Democratic papers have been in a kind of agonizing fear that some of their party—ten or fifteen thousand men—were about to go over to the Gardner organization; and they have been urging them not to do anything of the kind, but to stick to their own party. The Governor is said to have been induced to make his movement against Mr. BANKS in consequence of having received assurances from certain quarters that he would be supported by Democrats if the contest would be narrowed down to one between himself and Mr. BANKS. He has been so accustomed to control the Know-Nothings that he had no difficulty in believing that the Democratic leaders held their men as well in command as he has held his followers. But our Democrats, though not a faultless set of men, are generally "straight" in their ideas and practice, and have a strong fondness for individuality. They can neither be bought nor sold for the benefit of a Know-Nothing at the instance of a Collector or a Postmaster, whether he belongs to "the family," or is an outsider. If forced to choose between BANKS and GARDNER, four-fifths of the Democrats would vote for the former; but they are not forced to make any such choice, and will, with very few exceptions, stick to their own candidates. The exceptions will be only as the small dust of the balance.

If Governor GARDNER had any hope of assistance from the Democrats, their State Convention's action, yesterday, must have disabused his mind. That Convention was eight hundred strong, the largest that has been held this year, the number of the whole party considered. An attempt that was made to get up some trouble about the Custom-House officers was very promptly put down, or smothered. The resolutions adopted are of the ultra Pro-Slavery character, and are calculated to place the Democracy of Massachusetts in harmony with the Democracy of South Carolina. The speeches were made to match the resolutions, and proceeded from the mouths of gentlemen, most of whom have been good Abolitionists in their day, as they will be again when the Democracy of the nation shall have quarreled with the slaveholders. Mr. HALLETT, General BUTLER, Col. DAVIS, Col. WRIGHT, and the rest of them, have all gone further in "sectionalism" than any men in the Republican Party. They are men of ability, but not the less the most canting of hypocrites. They seemed to take especial pleasure in handling Governor GARDNER with gloveless hands, so that his Excellency must see that he has nothing to expect from the Democracy.

Mr. BEACH was nominated for Governor by acclamation, or something very like it. Some few rational men thought that the minority, if there were any, ought to have the privilege of voting, but they were roared down. Mr. BEACH is now in the third year of his candidacy, and may come in time to rival Gov. MORTON, who got into power 13 years after he was first put up. Mr. CURRIER was also renominated for Lieutenant-Governor. He is a respectable Newburyport master-mechanic, with as much intellect as any one of the many blocks which he has had hewn. Mr. WILKINSON, of Dedham, was nominated for Attorney-General. He is a sound lawyer, and such a Hunker that he would restore the régime under which the Quakers were hanged and the witches served with hempen sauce. The other candidates are of no account whatever, but will answer as well to fill the ditch to which they are doomed, as better men.

The Straight Republicans have resolved upon getting out a weekly paper in Boston, to appear in a few days. TREMONT.

Terrible Tragedy in Wrentham, Mass.

From the Boston Traveller.

The community of the little village of Wrentham, Norfolk County, Mass., has been in a state of intense excitement since Saturday evening last, in consequence of the murder there of a wife, under the following circumstances: GEO. R. LEWIS, a young man of that place, as he states, a few nights since discovered his wife, CAROLINE ELIZA LEWIS, with another man under such circumstances as to leave him to believe that she had been unfaithful to her marriage vows. Soon afterwards the wife left the house, and went to the residence of her mother. When questioned as to the cause of trouble, she stated her right to go where and with whom she pleased. On Saturday evening Mr. LEWIS, who had been out gunning, accidentally, as he states, met his wife near her mother's house, when he attempted to reason with her on her course, but she again emphatically declared that she would do as she pleased. Maddened, as he says, by this declaration, he fired at and shot her in the neck, afterwards striking her a violent blow in the head which fractured the skull. She lingered until Sunday morning, when she died. Mr. L. at once surrendered himself to the officers of justice. He is in a terrible state of excitement in consequence of the deed which he has committed.

Coroner EDWARD W. CRAIG, on Sunday summoned a jury of inquest, who after investigating the circumstances of the case, returned the following verdict: "That she came to her death by wounds inflicted by a gun in the hands of her husband, GEORGE R. LEWIS, on the evening of the 12th inst."

Mr. LEWIS was on Sunday evening brought before WILLIAM W. COWELL, upon a charge of murder, and pleaded not guilty.

Mr. LEWIS works upon a farm, is 22 years of age, and up to the present time has borne a good character. He was married to the deceased, his cousin, about two years since. Until within a few months she has acted with perfect propriety, so her husband states, but lately has absented herself from home, and otherwise conducted herself in a suspicious manner.

The case, if the story commonly told is correct, as it doubtless is, is a most extraordinary one. According to witnesses, upon the trial, she left her home on several occasions, and had remained away for several days at a time, without assigning any reason for her absence. The suspicions of her husband were very naturally aroused, and on Saturday evening as Mr. LEWIS states, his painful suspicions were entirely confirmed by the discovery he made at the house of his wife's mother.

After "a space" he (Lewis) says, she left the house and was shortly afterward followed by the wife. He brought her, as he says, to return to her home, and offered to forgive her. She rejected his overtures, and he shot her at once. He then immediately gave himself up to the officers and told this story—acknowledging his guilt, and making no attempt to escape.

Personal.

The Boston Advertiser tells of a curious case of identity: The barber of one of our principal hotels was astonished the day before yesterday. Two gentlemen of New-York, brothers, who are prominent in financial circles, and are distinguished for the very remarkable resemblance they bear each other, came together to this city and sojourned at the hotel in question, where, we believe, they still remain. Day before yesterday, after breakfast, one of them descended to the tonsorial regions and went through the usual operation of lathing, scraping, washing and brushing, and left with his face smoothness as apple. About half an hour after the other, for the same purpose, visited the man of the strop and razor, to his successive perturbation, he being unable to fathom the mystery of such miraculous fertility. However, he refrained from any demonstration of surprise, and until his customer, as he was about leaving, made some inquiries respecting a certain compound for the stimulation of redundant hair, when Figaro, greatly distressed by the idea of attempting to promote a growth already so abundant, exclaimed: "Really, Sir, unless you have a fortune to spend for hair-cutting and shaving, I should hardly recommend you to make use of any of my wares!"

The Evangelist says: Rev. Frederic Monod, of Paris, whose arrival we noticed a few days since, is still sojourning in this City, and is the guest of Rev. Dr. Potts. Mr. Monod will remain here a few days, after which he proposes a short journey West, returning in three weeks to prosecute the object of his visit to this country, which is to obtain aid for the erection of the Free French church in Paris. He has received a generous gift from Mr. James Lenox.

The Winter Lectures are preparing. Besides Mr. GILES on the Scots family, one is announced from Mr. WHIPPLE on "Young Men in History," a new series on Italian History by Professor GAIANI, a course on "Venice," by GEORGE TICKNOR, etc. The editor of the Boston Transcript has a lecture on "The Newspaper."

WASHINGTON IRVING'S Life of Washington is in course of publication, by Mr. BOHN, of London. "We believe it to be a copywright," says the Critic, "and therefore the appearance of it in an cheap form is a boon for which the reading public ought to be grateful."

Mr. Philip Clark, formerly of Iowa City, returned to that place lately, from California, after an absence of eight years. He left a wife, children and valuable farm, when he went to California. He finds on his return that his wife was long since married, having first secured a divorce. The farm has been sold.

Wm. C. Godfrey, one of the Kane expeditionists, is under arrest in Philadelphia, on a charge of bigamy or polygamy. Two of his wives were produced as witnesses, and a third was ready if needed. Godfrey also left

The Judiciary Question.

The propriety of nominating Judge Daniel as the Republican candidate has been discussed by one of the Republican Committees of this City. While it professes to honor and respect the principle of the independence of the Judiciary, and expressed a desire to stand by it, the question was raised whether Judge Daniel could be relied on to decide the Lemon case, which will come before his Court, in accordance with the views and wishes of the Republican party. D. D. Field, Esq., gave the evasive and quite unsatisfactory answer that as an old Democrat, Judge Daniel was unquestionably in favor of the doctrine of State Rights, and, therefore, opposed to overriding State laws in behalf of Slavery. How the fact may be we do not know, nor do we care to inquire. Those who believe Judge Daniel fit for the place he holds must believe that he will decide this case and every other that may come before him, in accordance with the Constitution and the law, and that is all that any one should expect or require at his hands.

In truth, the fact that the Republicans require preliminary assurances as to his views upon the Lemon case, shows conclusively that, if they support him at all, it will be upon some other ground than the Independence of the Judiciary Department of the Government from the influences of political partisanship. It shows that with them also Judges are to be nominated on account of their devotion to party interests and their subserviency to party objects. It is quite possible that this will prove to be the only basis upon which the system of an Elective Judiciary can rest,—that if Judges are to be elected, it must be by party votes, and that the only condition of a party nomination will be the open and unreserved espousal of party principles and a distinct pledge to be governed on the Bench by party views. The tendency of current politics is clearly in that direction. Political partisanship has already complete control of every other department of the Government: it would not be at all surprising if it should eventually effect the subjugation of this department also. But those who have faith in the principle of an Elective Judiciary, ought to be foremost in the endeavor to save it from such a degradation: for when it shall have been clearly established that a Judge is neither more nor less than a party tool,—that his decisions are to be dictated by party conventions and his action to be governed by party requirements, the next step will inevitably be the abolition of the elective system and a return to the old mode of appointment. It seems to us, therefore, a matter of the utmost importance, not to any party as such, but to conservative and patriotic men in all parties, that this tendency should be resisted,—and that a Judge who discards utterly the interests and the exactions of his own party friends, when they come in conflict with his clear and settled convictions of justice and of law, should receive in so doing the hearty and effective support of all who really prize the independence and integrity of the Judiciary Department.

That any political party will take such a stand, and set aside its own party aims and sentiments for the purpose of maintaining such a principle, we see no great reason for expecting. A political party exists for party ends. Its first aim is to obtain power, partly because it believes its possession of power essential to the public good, and partly because it knows the possession of office essential to its own. It has its own platforms and its own machinery of organized action,—and, when it goes beyond these and supports the candidates or adopts the measures of any other party, it runs the risk of weakening its own organization and losing the support of its own most zealous members. There are very many men, judicious and intelligent upon all other topics, who still do not believe that there can possibly be either virtue or patriotism outside the limits of their own political party;—and such men are naturally startled and alienated by the proposition to nominate upon their ticket one who already has a place upon that of some other party. The Republican Party, by nominating Judge Daniel, would undoubtedly incur this hazard; whether there would be any compensating advantages for such a step in a party point of view may be somewhat doubtful.

But it is not to the political and organized action of any party, that we are to look for the maintenance of such a principle as the one now involved. The independence of the Bench can only be secured by the independent action of the People, without regard to political divisions and in utter defiance of partisan dictation. Let it be thoroughly and universally understood that the Judiciary is not a party machine,—that men should not be elected judges because of their party relations, and that no citizen should be bound by his party alliances in voting for them, and the result may be accomplished. All parties as such, Republicans, Democrats, Americans and Prohibitionists, will undoubtedly aim to secure the election of judges identified with their own views and pledged to their own objects. But there are thousands and tens of thousands in the ranks of all these parties who can base their individual action upon higher motives and sounder principles. It is by them that the independence of the Judiciary must be maintained, if it is maintained at all.

THE ATLANTIC TELEGRAPH—CAUSE OF THE BREAK.—We hope that before the subject of the Telegraphic Cable is dismissed from the public mind, we may have some explanation of a very decided discrepancy in two accounts that have been published from high authority as to the immediate cause of the recent failure. It is understood everywhere that a very useless and untimely application of the brakes to the paying-out machinery was the immediate cause of the catastrophe;—but the important question is, by whose fault was this application made? Mr. Bangs, the engineer of the Company, in his official report, states that while he was gone forward, and without his knowledge, a mechanic whom he had left in temporary charge of the apparatus, applied the brakes and did the mischief. But on the other hand, Professor Morse, in his journal of the proceedings, states with still greater minuteness, that Mr. Bangs himself was the person by whose order the brakes were applied. The following is his statement of the affair:

Aug. 12, Noon.—At 3:45, yesterday morning, in latitude 52° 30′, longitude 17° 30′, Mr. Bangs, the engineer, went on deck; our ship was going at the rate of 4 miles 2 fathoms per hour, and the cable running out [illegible] Mr. Bangs spoke to them in consequence of the broken, telling him what [illegible] was paid, the [illegible] to which the answer was satisfactory, about 1,000 pounds. Mr. Bangs thinks he [illegible] 100 pounds more of force upon the brake, to check the speed of the cable. This was demurred to by the man for a moment, who expressed a fear that it would not be prudent. Mr. Bangs, however, persisted in his orders. The brakes were applied with the additional force, &c.

Prof. Morse here speaks with the utmost precision, and gives an account of what occurred so detailed and emphatic as to forbid the supposition that he was merely recording rumors that had reached him from other quarters. And if this account is true, it is very evident that Mr. Bangs is by no means a competent person for the very responsible post which he has hitherto filled in the Telegraph Company, and justice to him, as well as to others concerned, imperatively requires that there should be some explanation given of the exactly opposite and conflicting reports of the transaction given by Prof. Morse and Mr. Bangs. We take it for granted the Directors will give special attention to this point before proceeding further with the enterprise.

Ireland and India.

A thoroughly Hibernian meeting was held in this City on Thursday evening last—a meeting as thoroughly Hibernian in all its characteristics, that it really ought not to be suffered to "overcome us like a summer's cloud, without our special wonder."

An average Hibernian meeting does not, we regret to say, partake of the nature of news for a New-York public. The youngest inhabitant may muster several such meetings among the recollections which divide his latest corals from his earliest bib. But a full-choired convocation of double-voiced Celtic orator Puffs developing doctrines truly congenial to the Hibernian mind, and dealing with a subject exactly adapted to stimulate the emotional nature of the sons of Erin to its highest point, really is an event sufficiently rare to be interesting, and sufficiently amusing to detain a moment's attention. Such a convocation was the "mass" meeting held in Stuyvesant Hall on Thursday evening, the 17th of September. From beginning to end its proceedings were so purely characteristic that they invite the comments of the Press as irresistibly as the legendary pig who ran about roasted, with a knife and fork stuck in his side, solicited the affectionate concern of the epicures.

The meeting was called, in the first place, to express "sympathy with the Sepoys," those amiable and intelligent objects being not only quite out of the reach of the said meeting, but wholly unable to understand its drift if they were not so. It was a "Mass" meeting, and was therefore convened in one of the smallest halls in the City. "Eminent" speakers were to attend, and therefore Mr. MEAGHER and Mr. JOHN MITCHEL, the Grattan and Curran of the Irish-American world, departed, each on his own occasions, and "left that world to darkness and" DONERY. It was to have been held at seven o'clock, and therefore nothing was done till half an hour afterwards. It was to have been organized by Col. W. B. BURNETT, of Mexican-War and Gold-Box-Protest renown—and therefore one Col. W. J. HASKETT, of no particular renown at all, was called to the chair.

"So far, so Irish,"—and the subsequent proceedings were worthy, richly worthy, of the opening arrangements.

The Chairman, with Jovine dignity, announced that the intention of the assembled Hibernians before him was to "utter, in thunder-tones, their abhorrence of that robber-flag dyed with the blood of nations, though blasphemously emblazoned with the sign of the cross," which is more familiarly known to mortal men and to underwriters as the British Union Jack. Two secretaries were thereupon immediately appointed, to "bottle up the lightning" of the approaching tempest; and a certain Colonel DONERY forthwith began playing the part of the electric fluid, with great fervor and fury. He had quite made up his mind that the "naked assumptions of the annexations of the Kingdoms and Principalities of India by England were at present engaged in resistance to the East Indian Company's government;" a surprising circumstance, certainly, and not easily to be comprehended by the Teutonic, Norman or Sclavonic mind. Also, he was sure that "violating the rights of conscience of the soldier fully justified him in renouncing his allegiance in arms," and in employing the weapons bestowed upon him by England in the murder of unarmed Englishmen, women and children—a conviction which will hardly be shared by the Teutonic, Norman or Sclavonic mind, but which tallies too exactly with certain previously-avowed Celtic conceptions of the nature of "parole" to excite much surprise. Moreover, Colonel DONERY lifted up the heel of contempt against the neutrality laws of the United States, and, in a brilliantly Hibernian manner, denounced that particular provision of those laws under cover of which alone could he and his friends hope for permission to embark in an enterprise for the recovery of the "lost liberties" of their ungratefully-prosperous and disgustingly-contented native land!

Colonel DONERY also threw a good deal of lurid light on matters and things in general, inferentially confirming a notion quite popular in this country that "Irishmen will only be absolutely content with guerdons which immeasurably transcend their merits"—startling the un-Celtic world with the information that WILLIAM TELL, GEORGE WASHINGTON, LOUIS PHILIPPE and NAPOLEON BONAPARTE were all birds of a feather, and exulting immoderately over the rupture of the Atlantic Telegraph wire which had saved this country from being "broken up by Manchester goods, Sheffield ware, and the Bible bound up in cotton!"

The thunderers applauded the electric Colonel to the echo, and united with him in one tremendous declaration of tender regard and passionate concern for the one hundred and fifty million dark-skinned victims of "English tyranny in the East." That nothing might be wanting, however, to the Hibernian perfection of the performance, this expression of sympathy with the blacks in India was accompanied by many contemptuous allusions to the blacks in America. These allusions were so numerous and so full that Mr. JOHN MITCHEL, in reading the report of the meeting, must regret his precipitate flight from the responsibilities of the occasion. Of course he was induced to take this rash step by the [illegible] in the State with a contract [illegible] be an actual marriage, just as binding and valid as any other. If that should prove to be here, then their separation would amount to nothing,—for the subsequent marriage of either would be bigamy, and punishable by the law as such. If, on the other hand, their marriage should be held to be no marriage at all, but simply a case of unlawful intercourse, their children, if they have any, will be illegitimate, and incapable of the rights and privileges to which they should be entitled. With all persons of any moral sense at all, this consideration should outweigh the selfish desire to be freed from the conjugal relation whenever it may become burdensome. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis may be respectable people, and have a reasonable share of common sense on some subjects. But they have in this matter taken extraordinary pains to convince the world that they are either very great fools or very immoral and degraded persons.

THE MARINE UNDERWRITERS.—The action of the Board of Underwriters yesterday morning, on hearing of the disaster to the gold steamer, was prompt and commendable. It evinced the right spirit under calamity. It is the more acceptable as coming to the relief of a money market, otherwise pressed by dear rates of discount, and embarrassed by the recent dislocation of the exchanges with the interior, and we hope this example of real public spirit will not be without its influence on other moneyed interests. The marine companies not only offer to waive the sixty days' grace stipulated in their policies, but the formalities of adjustment, in order to meet the loss to the San Francisco correspondents of the American Exchange Bank, and other parties who have made drafts against this particular shipment.

The consignment to the Bank is probably the only very considerable sum covered in New-York. It is estimated at about $300,000. The other large consignees are, fortunately for our money market, insured in London. They are supposed to have about $950,000. The parcels under $50,000 or $60,000 insured here will hardly swell the total to the New-York offices above half a million, including the first-mentioned sum of $300,000. The offices in the neighboring cities will come off with a moderate total.

DEATH OF THE "MORMON."—The Mormon, of this City, died with this week's number. The valedictory of the editor assigns no reason for the discontinuance of the paper, but intimates that Mr. APPLEBY, who has conducted it since the departure of President TAYLOR for Utah, will devote himself until Spring to the furtherance of the interests of the faithful in the Atlantic States. There is no news from Utah in this issue later than that already published in the TIMES. The editor, however, takes up the cudgels in defence of the sect from the attacks of the Press, and in the course of the article on this subject there is a spicy bit, which savors of the tone employed by BRIGHAM YOUNG himself in his discourses to the Saints at headquarters. The Mormon says:

"We feel like endeavoring to take our own part in any way our enemies can assail us. We will trust in the Lord, and abide our time, live or die. The Mormons are not easily scared, but bold. The eternal truth from heaven which they are in possession of, makes them bold. They know Mormonism is true, and is bound to go ahead and prosper—so howl and yelp on, you poor miserable curs. Rather calculate that whenever we, our principles, or friends, are attacked, to defend our rights and their also. The "ultimate fate of Mormonism" will be its extension over the whole earth."

THE EAGLES OF PRUSSIA AND AMERICA.—Mr. HILL, a member of the Legislature of Missouri, from Carondelet, who arrived in this city on Wednesday, in the Steamer Harmonie, from Hamburg, requests us to contradict a statement copied into the New-Yorker Staats-Zeitung, from the St. Louis Herald, to the effect that he, Mr. HILL, being a native of Prussia, had been arrested and imprisoned in that Kingdom as a deserter from the Prussian military service. Mr. HILL emphatically denies that he experienced any annoyance from the Prussian authorities during his recent visit to the "Old Country," and consequently declines the honor of figuring as a "victim" in the premises. The Prussian Eagle may, therefore, way his two heads, for the present, in peace, without danger of disturbance by his American brother.

Decoy Letters.

To the Editors of the New-York Times:

In the course of a communication in the TIMES, a few days since, the following passage occurs:

"Little over a year ago, a clerk in our Post-Office was suspected of opening letters to purloin money from them. The guilt was rendered transparent by the ingenious stratagem of placing in his way a letter with marked money in it. He fell into the trap. There was ample proof of his having opened the letter and taken the money, but it was held that his act, in so doing, was not an offence within the Act of Congress; it was a decoy letter. In Mrs. Burdell's case the baby was a decoy, marked and placed in her way."

The statement as to the "decoy letter" is incorrect. The decisions as to such letters, when used as a means of detection, have invariably been, in the United States Courts, that they do come within the act of Congress, and convictions have invariably followed, as often as the guilt of the parties purloining them has been fully established. In fact, on the last trial of this kind in New-York, which was probably the one referred to by your correspondent, the only defence set up was that which he suggests, and it was promptly set aside by the Court, and the prisoner convicted, and sent to the State Prison for the term of ten years—the shortest period provided in the Post-Office laws, when the person convicted of embezzling a letter is "employed in any of the Departments of the Post-Office establishment."

The following portion of Judge BETTS' decision on that point is reported in HOLBROOK'S "Ten Years Among the Mail Bags."

"Nor, indeed, if the accused can prove, or it is made to appear upon the evidence of the prosecution, that the letter was placed in the mail, or came into a post-office, prepared and intended as a decoy, and was not intrusted to the mail in the way of bona fide correspondence, is the criminality of taking it thereby absolved; even if the evidence advances another stage, and shows that the decoy was aimed at and intended for the particular person caught by it. (The United States vs. Lawrence, 3 McLean R. 461; The United States vs. Faye, 1 Curtis R. 397-8.)"

One of the most certain engagements that any management can make is undoubtedly with Mme. LA GRANGE, a singer who has proved herself not only capable, but eminently willing and reliable, on all occasions and in all seasons. A large audience assembled last night, at the Academy of Music, to welcome this popular favorite back to the scene of her many triumphs. The opera was "Norma," one on which criticism has long been exhausted. It was, on the whole, well given, although there were some drawbacks. Mme. LA GRANGE was in good voice, and sang and acted as though she were really competing with some one. Mme. STRAKOSCH, the Adalgisa, was, as ever, fresh and interesting, although evidently laboring under the remains of recent indisposition. GARDINI, if not powerful, was pleasing and artist-like. The difficulty lay with the tenor, Signor SCOTA, who, in the first act, broke down. An apology was made by the stage manager, and Signor MACCARESI, who happened to be in the house as a spectator, gallantly volunteered for the emergency, and dispatched the remainder of the opera with gusto. The orchestra, under Mr. ARDITI, was better than we have heard it since the first night.

At the end of the second act Mme. LA GRANGE received the unusual honor of a flight of doves (a couple) who flopped down somewhat ungracefully at her feet, and greatly astonished a number of honest country folk not accustomed (fortunately) to such ovations.

THE NEWS OF THE DAY.

The loss of the Central America was the absorbing topic of conversation yesterday. The meager character of the dispatch published in the morning papers, in which no names of the saved were given, created intense anxiety on the part of all who either had, or supposed they might have, friends on board; and this was only partially alleviated by the report of the names of a portion of the survivors received, which was received by telegraph and published in the evening edition of the TIMES. Rumors were current throughout the day that the steamer had long been unseaworthy, and the names of several persons were mentioned who had refused either to go out or send goods by her, but as such reports always prevail upon the loss of any vessel, they are entitled to little attention unless authenticated by some authority. The insurance companies came forward with commendable promptness, and claimed to pay their losses upon receipt of the bills of lading, whilst swelling themselves at the delay to which they are entitled. We are still without full reports of this great disaster, but the telegraph adds somewhat to the information of yesterday.

In Wall-street yesterday, the Banks were in no way influenced in their movement by the loss of treasure in the Central America. The large insurances in London caused nearly a million of Exchange which, with the thirteen millions Gold [illegible], still steady the general feeling of confidence. Specie will reach until the next California mail, due about 25th inst. The Banks continue to do a liberal part by their most steady customers, but the pressure for discounts is still beyond their ability to accommodate, and the paper thrown out finds a severe market among outside money brokers, who are getting 18 per cent. off the very best bills. The Stock Board was not at first materially affected by the loss of the steamer. In the afternoon, however, the tone of the market was heavy. The action of the Board of Underwriters in resolving to pay the Gold losses at once, without waiting the sixty days allowed by their policies, was highly commended, and had a good effect in removing all apprehension of serious difficulty in the payment of the California drafts when the duplicates come forward in the next mail. The Corn Exchange was moderately active, and Flour advanced 10@15 cents. Exchange on Europe closed dull, and large parcels of English bills, with Bank indorsement, were offered at 107½@¾ cent.

A very curious controversy among the Generals of the American army who were concerned in the conquest of Mexico seems to have been started by the recent letter of General PILLOW, of Tennessee. The principal object of that letter was to claim for himself the credit of having planned one of the most important operations of the campaign, and of having protested against the purchase of a treaty of peace from Mexico by Mr. TRIST, who acted with the concurrence and approbation of, General SCOTT. Brigadier-General HITCHCOCK has written a reply to this epistle, which will probably cause some considerable regret in the mind of General PILLOW that he should ever have done so independent a thing as to open such a controversy. Gen. H. flat factens upon Gen. P. the odious imputation of having accepted a command in the Mexican war for the purpose of being a spy upon his commanding General; and he then proceeds to show that General PILLOW himself in council approved of the very proceeding for which he now affects to censure Gen. SCOTT. He also convicts him of a deliberate attempt to rob a brother officer of the credit to which he was entitled, and sets forth the manner in which this effort was regarded and treated by Gen. SCOTT. The controversy will probably be still farther continued and will make public a good deal more than is now known of the secret history of the Mexican War.

A telegraphic dispatch from Washington states that the Administration has received authentic information of the fitting out of three several expeditions for the invasion of Nicaragua—at New-York, New-Orleans, and Mobile; and of another expedition, having its centre in Texas, and headed by SAM HOUSTON, for the seizure of the Mexican State of Tamaulipas. The Administration is determined to enforce the Neutrality laws, and a form of instructions has been prepared by Executive authority to forward to the United States Marshals and District-Attorneys on the seaboard for their guidance in the matter.

A committee of the Temperance people, formed in Convention some two years since, and of which WILLIAM RICHARDSON is Chairman, have issued a call for another State Convention, to be held at Syracuse on Wednesday, the 6th of October. The "regular" Convention is to be held at Rochester on the 30th inst. The Committee under whose authority the new Convention is called are those opposed to Mr. DELAVAN.

The works of the Telegraph Flour Mills in [illegible] situated at the corner of FAWN and [illegible] exploded on Thursday morning, [illegible] and injuring seventeen others, [illegible] fatally. The boiler-house, and [illegible] machinery, were demolished.

In the [illegible] JAMES R. DOWNEILY for the murder of [illegible] MOSES, still in progress at Freehold, N. J., important witnesses [illegible] on Thursday afternoon relative to the [illegible] and conduct of the prisoner [illegible] were examined. More medical testimony was given on the part of the prosecution, and Mr. SOMERVILLE testified to the [illegible] made in his [illegible] charging the latter with [illegible] will not be [illegible] public interest. The Cooper General Committee met last night at Tammany Hall, and passed resolutions indorsing the State nominations, and urging their support.

[illegible] Gen. PILLOW was supposed of it in council, [illegible] and it was [illegible] that they, however, discovering [illegible] was not likely to succeed, as in [illegible] fact, for the measure was never executed, he slyly prepared a paper, to be raked up in [illegible] to show to the admiring world how ex[illegible] he felt for the success of the enterprise. [illegible] this? anything failed, [illegible] shocks of Gen. PILLOW, who—and here [illegible] point equally to his discredit—claimed [illegible] that the battle of Contreras [illegible] was won in accordance with his plan of battle, [illegible] as is perfectly well known, after hearing [illegible] of the plan, as proposed by Gen. PIERCE, F. P. SCOTT, through that accomplished and [illegible] aide-de-camp officer, Col., then Capt. R. E. LEE, [illegible] Maj. NEWMAN S. P. TAYLOR said, and privately declared to him, that Ex-Gen. PILLOW had no confidence in the plan, and charged him to remember that he told him so! I was present at the head-[illegible] of Gen. SCOTT, at San Augustine, the evening or night of the 19th of August, 1847, when Capt. LEE came in from the advanced post of Gen. [illegible], and reported to Gen. SCOTT a plan for taking Contreras by assault the next morning, as suggested by Gen. SMITH. In the course of the examination of the plan by Gen. SCOTT, Generals PILLOW and TWIGGS came in. The divisions of these Generals were then in the field before Contreras, two or three miles from San Augustine. Gen. SCOTT modified the plan in one, not very essential point, and directed Capt. LEE to carry it into execution as Gen. SMITH, with instructions, had suggested it. A movement was then made towards the close by Generals TWIGGS and PILLOW, when Gen. SCOTT remarked that as the night was dark and rainy they might as well return to their camps and wait the next morning. Upon which Gen. PILLOW observed, that "his division was in the field, and that his place was with it;" but Gen. PILLOW showed himself very easily to be persuaded to take a good bed in Gen. SCOTT's quarters, and was asleep when the next morning, when the assault on Contreras, which was taken in a few minutes by the watch, in accordance with the suggestions or plan of Gen. SMITH. Being willing to bet Gen. PILLOW, to be prepared for a disaster, or a failure, expressly, but privately, [illegible] Mr. TRIST, with whom he was then on intimate terms, that he had no confidence in the plan and desired him to remember that he had so declared himself. This fact I had from Mr. TRIST himself.

This brings me to another point in Gen. PILLOW's address, where he endeavors to make it appear that Gen. SCOTT was most urgent in seeking his counsel and confidence, garoling for this purpose a note from Gen. SCOTT, in which he says: "Permit me to repeat once more that I have, from my first meeting with you, been anxious from a high opinion of your head and heart, your intelligence, honor, zeal and valor, to win your esteem and confidence on any terms consistent with justice and honor."

The reader will be astonished when he hears the true history of the note from which this extract is made, which is this: On the afternoon of the 19th of August, when the strong post at Contreras was invested, Gen. PILLOW being the senior officer of the troops designated for service against that post, this General, as he almost proved before the Court of Inquiry subsequently, in an interview with General THOS. CORWIN, BILLY suggested, as it would appear, somewhat in the way of a query, "Can you not (with your regiment) get into the rear of the enemy and make an assault there?" Gen. BILLY's recollection was by no means clear as to what Gen. PILLOW said, and it was plain that nothing that could be called a plan of battle was suggested, much less ordered. Gen. BILLY did, however, succeed in reaching the rear of Contreras, and there repulsed handsomely a charge of Mexican horse; but no assault was made upon Contreras.

This evening, as already stated, Gen. SMITH proposed a night movement, by which a body of men were to be thrown in a position for a daylight assault the next morning, from the direction of some timber beyond the position reached by Gen. BILLY the day before, and this was the plan in which Gen. PILLOW, as declared to Mr. TRIST, had no confidence. The plan succeeded, and Contreras fell easily into the possession of our forces, though occupied by 5,000 choice troops, with some twenty pieces of artillery, under command of Gen. VALENCIA, one of the most distinguished of Mexico's Generals. Here were taken a number of officers of high rank, both civil and military, and here, too, were recovered two six-pounders so nobly defended, though honorably lost, at Buena Vista, in the preceding February.

In the official report of this battle, Gen. PILLOW, though actually in bed at San Augustine, three or four miles from the scene of action, when the battle came off, and after the secret caution to Mr. TRIST to remember his disapproval of the plan for the assault, actually claimed that the battle was fought after his plan, defending this monstrous assertion subsequently by referring to some never-to-be-certainly something, alleged to have been said to Gen. BILLY the day before, which came to nothing, whatever it was.

Now, the reader will please mark what followed.

After the American Army had entered the capital, and General SCOTT had undertaken the difficult and delicate task of making a general report of the operations of the army in the valley of Mexico, for which purpose he was obliged to read very carefully the reports of the various commanders who had respectively reported upon their own operations, he fell upon the report of General PILLOW upon the taking of Contreras. He could not fail to notice the absurdly and grossly false claim therein set up of having planned the method of assault by which that place was taken—having certain knowledge that the plan had been proposed by General SMITH, under circumstances already stated. It became necessary for Gen. SCOTT to assign the honor to Gen. SMITH to whom it was due, and thinking or hoping that Gen. PILLOW's sense of justice needed nothing but a hint, to induce him to modify his report, he wrote a private note to him, calling his attention to an inadvertency, by which, if unchanged, an injury might be done to Gen. SMITH, and asked him to reconsider his report. To Gen. SCOTT's great surprise, Gen. P. declined to change his report, and reiterated his pretension that the battle had been fought in accordance with his plan. In this state of things, Gen. SCOTT determined to make another effort, and addressed another private note to Gen. PILLOW, and reasoned the point with him, trying him to so modify his report as not to interfere with the just claims of Gen. SMITH, and here it was that Gen. SCOTT, in a spirit of kindness and conciliation, condescended to appeal to Gen. PILLOW's better feelings, if he had any, and professed his earnest wish to maintain friendly relations with him, on any terms consistent with justice and honor—as if he had said: You are barely attempting to deprive Gen. SMITH of honors justly belonging to him, and it is my duty to see justice done to all of the officers of the army; as to yourself, I honor your good qualities, and desire to maintain friendly relations with you, but mark, only on terms consistent with justice and honor. Who does not see that this is the true spirit of the earnest desire so fruitlessly paraded, of Gen. SCOTT, to secure the friendship of his second in command.

To any eye but one blinded by vanity or blinded by moral obliquity, the note from Gen. SCOTT was one of the most insulting that could have been penned. It expressed a condition for the maintenance of friendly relations which, to a consciously right-minded man, would have gone to the heart with the effect of a two-edged sword. It contained a plain implication that General PILLOW might be a dishonest man—that he might be capable of robbing a brother soldier of his justly acquired honors.

The end sufficiently illustrates the characters of the two men. General PILLOW persisted in his pretension; and General SCOTT, as he could not maintain friendly relations with him "consistently with justice and honor," dropped these relations; and now, whole years having intervened, General PILLOW would have his readers believe that General SCOTT sought most anxiously his friendship.

But I must desist from further comments upon this discreditable address, filled as it is with artfully-stated half-truths, which are often a species of most detestable falsehoods, and leave to others the task, if any one thinks it worth while, to show how preposterous it is in Gen. PILLOW to criticise the operations of the army under Gen. SCOTT, making his comments upon circumstances only brought to light after the accomplishment of the events referred to. We does not know what sort of a capacity it requires to plan operations after the fact, and show how much better things might have been done! Thus General PILLOW finds fault with the armistice granted by General SCOTT to the Mexicans while their government was yet intact within the city, and had the highest motives for making a peace on any terms having the streets of the capital disembarrassed by the tread of a foreign army. Gen. SCOTT [illegible] that the armistice was granted at his suggestion on the evening of the battle of Churubusco, and I heard him tell the Mexican Commissioners so at the moment they presented the application of SANTA ANA for an armistice. Gen. SCOTT knew that he could enter the city, but he knew also, that his doing so would deprive the Government, and that it might require whole months afterwards to find a Government in condition to make a peace, as proved to be the case when, finally, he did enter the city. There was a reasonable hope of avoiding that delay by acceding to the proposed armistice. That it was not avoided General PILLOW has had the wit to see, after the fact, and now comments upon it.

It is proper for me to say that some two years since I resigned my commission in the army in which I had served nearly forty years, and have sought a self-imposed retirement to pursue a course of study altogether private and personal, with no desire or intention of mingling in any political or other controversies; but meeting with this attempt, as I consider it, of General PILLOW, to throw discredit upon the one soldier of our country whom the country delights to honor, whose "Conquest of Mexico" will be read in after days with that of CORTEZ, I could not help placing on record some few facts known to myself for the benefit of History. As for the immediate object of General PILLOW's address, that of securing a seat in the Senate of the United States, I have nothing to say, but to express my hope that Tennessee has worthier sons, more entitled to that honor.

E. A. HITCHCOCK,
Acting Inspector-General of the American Army in Mexico, and late Brevet Brigadier-General, U. S.
Louis, Missouri, Sept. 14, 1857.

COL. SUMNER'S FIGHT WITH THE INDIANS.—The St. Joseph's (Mo.) Journal of the 8th inst. says that a Mr. HIRES arrived there from Santa Fe. His company found Colonel SUMNER's command quartered for the time being, on the Arkansas river. The soldiers from whom he received full particulars of the late fight, were very much dissatisfied with their condition, were subsisting entirely upon buffalo meat. Col. SUMNER overtook the Indians about the middle of August, and on his coming up, the Indians wheeled into rank, and formed as well as any disciplined troops could have done. At the time Col. SUMNER came upon the Indians, his artillery and baggage wagons were some six miles in the rear, and his cavalry were all mounted on young horses totally unaccustomed to military manœuvres, and in consequence of these facts, the whole command dreaded to encounter them. The Indians received the fire of the Americans coolly, and returned it with effect, killing and wounding four of them. The Indians' loss was twenty, killed and wounded.

Col. SUMNER had sent a detachment to Fort Kearney for provisions, which Mr. HIRES and his company met as they came in. A number of the soldiers spoke of deserting the first opportunity. They speak of the hardships attending the expedition, as being more than they could endure.

JUDGE CURTIS.—We have an authentic explanation of Judge CURTIS' resignation. He retires from the Supreme Bench simply because of the insufficiency of the salary, which he finds utterly inadequate to the support of his family. He proposes to return to the practice of his profession.—Richmond South.

NO INSURANCE ON THE CENTRAL AMERICAN LOSSES OF THE COMPANY.—Mr. KIRBY, of MARSHAL O. ROBERTS' office, says that they have no insurance on the Central America. The Company have never insured any of their steamers, preferring to save the money for themselves which they would be obliged to expend in insurance policies and take the chances of shipwreck and other losses. Upon the specie and freight there were insurances, of course, the insurances having been effected by the shippers.

The Central America is the third steamer this Company have lost. In August, 1853, the Cherokee was burned at her wharf in this City, and was a total loss. In December, 1855, the Crescent City ran on Illan Minat reef, near Nassau, N. P., and was also a total wreck. No passengers of the latter steamer, it will be remembered, were lost, and most of of the freight was saved.

THE FINALE OF AN ELOPEMENT.—Quite an excitement was created at an early hour this morning, at one of the hotels, by the discovery of an eloped couple by the husband of the woman. The circumstances of the case were as follows: About eight days since a fine looking young German, about 21 years old, with a rather handsome young married woman, eloped from New-York and came to this city. Being discovered, as stated, by the husband, the latter was much enraged, and this morning arming himself with a heavy pistol, proceeded to the room were the guilty couple were, with the intention of shooting the young man. Bloodshed being feared, the police were sent for, and officer BRADY went and succeeded in obtaining the pistol, which was loaded with a ball. He then got entrance into the room, and so arranged matters that the wife and her legal spouse returned together to New-York, and the young man proceeded in an opposite direction. The husband was exceedingly enraged at first, and had it not been for the interference of the officer the result would doubtless have been serious.—Newark Adv., 12th.

Obscene Publications.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

SIR: A wish to be useful urges me to suggest through the columns of your journal, to the Mayor and authorities of the City, a step that may prevent much morel mischief. It appears that not less than six cartloads of the vile obscenity, seized the other day, is deposited in the cells at the City Prison. There is reason to fear that before its final destruction some of it may get surreptitiously into circulation. Would not the Mayor consult the interests of all, and satisfy correct feeling, if he would order the whole of it to be instantly and publicly burnt? This would meet the fears of many that the punishment of the miscreant publisher, when apprehended, will only partially meet the evil. I believe there are many who would rejoice to know that these disgraceful and disgusting things are destroyed so openly and in so public a way as to leave no doubt of their destruction.

Yours, respectfully,
A FRIEND TO SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

A REVELATION ALMOST TOO TERRIBLY TRUE FOR BELIEF!

The Desperate Cruelty—The Corrupting and Diabolical Mysteries—The Sanctified Libidinism of Mormonism, FULLY AND OPENLY EXPOSED!

BY A FUGITIVE FROM THE GREAT SALT LAKE CITY.

The following deeply-exciting Romance, founded upon the direst truths, is destined to create the most tremendous sensation, and must appeal to every sympathetic heart, and make the blood fill with untold horror at the foul corruption—the vile adulterous connections—the unscrupulous cruelty, and the utter depravity, in which Brigham Young and his fiendish accomplices are steeped to the lips. Every person in America, who can read, should peruse this harrowing Tale of Temptation, Lust, Escape, Vengeance and Death, written by one who has suffered—deeply suffered—at the hands of Brigham Young and his accursed satellites, and who escaped, as if by a miracle, to reveal to the world this atrocious infamy.

ARDINE:
OR,
THE AVENGER OF WRONG.

A TALE OF MORMONISM IN NEW-YORK AND THE FAR WEST.

BY A FUGITIVE FROM UTAH.

CHAPTER I.

THE VICTIM OF THE LYNCHERS.

"Mercy!"

"Death to heretics!"

The scene was that of twilight shadows, settling over the pinecrs of Utah, within sight of that Babylon of the West, Salt Lake City. A man knelt in the presence of six others, and, with uplifted hands, pleaded for his life. His countenance was expressive more of surprise than fear, and presented a handsome appearance, tinged, as it was, with the pallor of dread. The six men who stood by were rudely clad, and their features were of that rough, swarthy mould, which denotes the callous and desperate villain.

They were standing amid a clump of trees, which stood alone upon the plain, over the slowest branch of one of which was suspended a stout rope, the end formed into a noose at back.

"Mercy!" again pierced the trembling man, in a tone of supplication.

"You plead in vain," said one, who seemed to be the ringleader. "It is the prophet's command that we hang you to the nearest tree."

"What!" cried the man, springing to his feet, and casting upon them a look of scorn; "are you men that dare your de (this? The false-hearted prophet banished me from your city; for this I did not care, for it was my desire to flee it and its contaminating pestilence; but now you tell me that his orders were to hang me! And for what offence?"

"Apostacy!" replied the leader in a cool tone.

"Apostacy!" cried the victim. "Did I deserve hanging when I discovered the religion of my fathers—the religion of the Bible—and clung to yours? And now, when my eyes are opened, and I see the base hypocrisy and corruption of your fanaticism, and throw off its shackles, who dare condemn me?"

"Don't listen to him, Clotos," said one, addressing the leader. "If we delay to hang this recreant, he would scam be in the States, telling all sorts of stories about us."

"You are right, Simpton," said the leader. "Adding, you must die."

"I talk to stone," said the unlucky victim; "but grant me one request."

"What is it?" asked Clotos, the leader.

"Permit me to write a farewell line to my sister—one of Pratt's wives."

"Well, you can do that; we will give you five minutes time," said the leader, stepping back.

The victim took a piece of paper from his pocket, and, with a pencil, wrote a few hasty lines thereon; then, folding it carefully, turned to the party and said:

"Which of you will promise, sacredly, to give this to my sister?"

"I will," said a tall, brawny man, with some touch of humor in his face, and stepping boldly forward he took the letter.

"Thanks! And now, Sim, if you are determined to hang me up here like a dog, I will distrike a man. Come! I am ready!"

There was a tone of determined resolution in his manner that seemed to cast a spell over the bravado of the lynchers. They proceeded to fasten his arms in silence, and then adjusted the rope round his neck.

"Death to all heretics and apostates!" shouted the leader.

"Death to all apostates!" echoed one and all. And, as though this was the signal, two men gave a sudden pull of the other end of the rope, and Ardine was dangling between earth and heaven.

The rope was speedily fastened around the tree, and having made all secure, the men stood for a second, gazing upon their victim.

"Come! to horse!" suddenly cried their leader. "Back to the holy city!"

Each man vaulted into his saddle, and, a moment after, six horsemen were galloping over the plain toward Salt Lake, the dome of whose temple was just visible above the horizon, darkening in the twilight shadows.

CHAPTER II.

THE RESCUE.

The dust had not yet settled in the wake of the six lynchers, when a lone traveler entered the clump of trees in which hung the body of Ardine. His appearance was that of a rough westerner, who had traveled far, and become reckless of his dress and personelle, as well as the manner of his gait. His features were rough and swartthy, and his frame tall, bony and athletic. He seemed to have happened there by chance, and without an object.

The traveler's eye, however, soon fell upon the body of Ardine, and he started.

"Death and the devil!" he exclaimed; "here's been some pesky work! Why, there must have been some of the old Illinois Regulators out here. But let's see? If I'm any judge o' human nater, that man don't look as if he ought to have been hung. I'll cut him down at any rate." And so saying, the stalwart traveler caught the body round the waist with his left arm, and, with the other, he drew a long knife from his belt and cut the rope.

Removing the clothing from the breast, he felt about the heart, and put his ear to it, and then, as a gleam of satisfaction sparkled in his eye, he drew from his pocket a small canteen of brandy, and began to wash the swollen signes of the throat, putting a little on the lips and nostrils. A few moments passed before any signs of life were manifest, when a gurgling sound was heard in the throat, and a slight convulsion apparent in the gleaming.

"Man, or devil, good or bad, I'll do my best to bring you back to life, old feller!" said the traveler, rubbing the neck and body more vigorously than ever.

Presently the man opened his eyes in a fixed stare, for a moment, when his lips began to move. Then his hand raised intuitively to his bruised neck—the face began to take expression, and the entire body to manifest returning life.

"Take a sip of this; it'll do you good," said the traveler, lifting his head on one arm, and presenting him the canteen of brandy.

The reviving man grasped the canteen to his lips, and, though swallowing with difficulty, succeeded in drinking a considerable quantity. Its influence was effective, and Ardine soon sat upright, and, after a little, began to show signs of reason and speech.

"Well, old feller, I rather think you must have begun to smell brimstone that time! But what the deuce were you strung up there for? Can't you tell a feller?" said the droll traveler.

After several efforts, Ardine succeeded in gaining the power of speech.

"I can scarce tell you now, my friend," he replied, in broken, gasping sentences. "I was hung by a lot of Mormons; simply because I became convinced of the corruption and hypocrisy of the church, and wished to leave it."

"Is that all?" cried the stranger. "Blast their Millerised hearts! I just wish our party was big enough, I'd knock the whole city into a second Nauvoo."

"But who, my friend, are you? And how came you hither so opportunely?" asked Ardine.

"Well, to answer both questions at once," replied the traveler, "I'm Josh Stratum, from the State of Illinoy, and belong to the party of Illinoy emigrants now encamped about half a mile across the plain. After plishin' my text, as some of 'em said we were in sight of Salt Lake City, I thought I'd walk across and take a view of it by moonlight. I was passin' through this little strip; saw you, cut you down, and now you know all about it."

"And how can I thank you for you kindness, my friend?" said Ardine, feebly.

"By not mentioning it," said the emigrant, good-naturedly. "But come, can you walk? You don't want to go back among the Mormons again, I guess, so come with me over to the camp, and we will see what can be done for you."

Ardine rose to his feet, and turning his gaze towards the city, from which he had been banished, his brow darkened as he exclaimed:

"Farewell! thou putrid hot-bed of licentious wantonness! Thou Babylon of the present! Belshazzar revel within thy walls, but the day is not far distant when thy doom shall be seen as the hand-writing on the wall! Farewell, false Prophet and thy satellites! But beware, for Lemuel Ardine still lives!"

A brief walk brought the twain to the camp of the emigrants, some hundred or more in number.

A few words from Stratum, spoken in his peculiar way, at once won for Ardine the sympathies of the entire party; and, after discussing as good a supper as could well be gotten up under the circumstances, he told his story, as follows:

"I was born in a small village in the State of Connecticut. My parents both died when myself and sister were still young, and we were left poorly enough to take care of ourselves as best we could. We grew up under the patronage of different relations, each receiving a moderate schooling, except my youngest sister, who, from her beauty and amiability, being the favorite of a wealthy aunt, received a polished education.

About eighteen months ago there came to the village, under the patronage of Orson Pratt, a Mormon elder, who preached his doctrines boldly, and with such a show of sincerity, that many who were induced to listen to him at last embraced the faith, my eldest sister and myself among the number.

Through frequent persuasions, and the most flattering inducements, I was led to sacrifice the considerable property I had amassed since the attainment of my majority, and remove to Utah. I attended my sister, the elder, and several other families, we joined a party of emigrants in New-York, and arrived here about a year ago.

I soon found not only that all I possessed was passing into the hands and power of the church—which simply means the private coffers of the Prophet and elders—but that, as a people, they were given to the greatest licentiousness and mercenary enjoyment. My sister, soon after our arrival, was sealed to the latter who had brought us here, and who already had six wives.

I at last became thoroughly disgusted with all around me, and have recently declared it boldly. To-day the Prophet banished me from the city, in company with six ruffians, whose private orders were to hang me to the nearest tree. They had but the week accomplished his orders, had not Mr. Stratum come upon me accidentally and cut me down.

"I am beholden now," he said, "and will bend my steps towards the El Dorado, where I may find gold to help me wreak my vengeance on this city. Then let the murdering crew beware!"

CHAPTER III.

THE VISIT TO THE DEAD.

In a sumptuous apartment in one of the most gorgeous mansions of Salt Lake City, sat a young lady of apparently 20 years of age, arrayed in a loose wrapper of purple hue, which harmonized brilliantly with her healthful complexion and well-developed features, while it gave double attraction to the exquisite contour of her perfect form. Her countenance was mild and placid, her eyes and mouth only manifesting the emotion that moved her. Her dark hair was modestly confined by a small bandeau, while the richest of bosoms just peeped out from the purple frame-work of the dress, which was turned back from the arching neck.

She held in her hand a light piece of needlework, but it lay listlessly in her lap, and her dark eyes, peering through the long pendant lashes with something of a sad gleam, were fixed abstractedly upon the carpet. Such was Linda Ardine, whose brother we have seen brutally hung upon a tree. She is in the mansion of Elder Pratt—his sealed mistress.

"So they have driven my brother from the city, at last," she murmured, sadly. "I feared his indiscretion would lead to this! And now I am here alone! I knew not why it is, but I dread this event. I felt secure and content while he was here; but now that he is gone, a fear comes stealing over my heart that all is not right. But where can Parley be?"

She rose about rising from her seat, when a rap was heard at the door. It was a messenger with a letter. She recognized the superscription in pencil. It was Lemuel's—her brother's! She tore it open and read as follows:

"DEAR LINDA—I have been deceived—betrayed! My doom was not only banishment but death! The men who were sent to accompany me out of the city were secretly instructed to hang me! In a few moments more I shall die, sister—die by the orders of that arch fiend, Brigham Young, whom you persist in calling Prophet! O, sister, fly the city! Go back to our lovely valley of Vermont, and live a virtuous life. Farewell! my executioners are waiting. Your brother, LEMUEL ARDINE.

"Good heavens!" exclaimed, with livid lips, the beautiful girl, as she sprang to the door, and hurried her face in her hands. "Can this be possible? I can scarce believe my eyes! And yet it is his hand-writing—his signature. By heavens! if it be, and I gain one clue to the murderers, they will find one Ardine left, that will prove more terrible than he!"

She rose to her feet in an attitude of stern resolution, and stood, for a moment, as though contemplating some dark scheme. Then touching the bell upon the table, she waited but a second for an answer. A servant entered.

"James, saddle my horse and bring him round to the door. Stop! stay a moment; can you find the Elder Parley Pratt's residence in the eastern part of the city. Well, then I will write down the direction. Yes, immediately, raising her head proudly. Quickly, I say!"

"Yes, madam." The servant bowed himself out.

"They could not have gone far to do the deed," she exclaimed quickly. "For they must be back there. I will go to the spot, prove to myself, and have decent burial, in spite of them. Now for my disguise!" And, with an excited step, she left the room.

Half an hour later, the servant we have seen enter the parlor, caused by the road side, on the suburbs of the city, holding by the rein a black horse, of that fleet species known as the Kentucky breed. The animal arched his glossy neck, and champ his luxurious mane impatiently, as though weary of the slow pace in which he had been brought to the spot. A moment after, a female form, closely veiled, and dressed in a black riding dress, appeared upon the ground.

"If they ask for me at the house," she said, addressing the servant, "you can tell them I have ventured on a short evening ride to try the pony."

"Yes, madam," replied the servant.

Taking a spring, she mounted the saddle, and pulled him sharply on the rein, until he leaped upward, and his fierce eyes seemed to subdue into womanly gentleness.

"Now, Montezuma, for a quick race," she cried, as with true New-England style she vaulted, unassisted, into the saddle.

The horse, apparently understanding his words, scarcely waited for her command, but stretched out on the road, and over the plained, like a flying cloud swept by a hurricane!

The moon had just risen above the horizon, like a fire-off burning world, and its red glaring human face seemed to be gazing with wonder upon the flying horse and its veiled rider, as they swept like dark messengers of a coming storm.

Not many minutes elapsed—scarce a quarter of an hour—before Linda Ardine reined in her fiery steed within the clump of trees known as the Eastern Grove, and gazed wildly around to ascertain bringing form of her murdered brother. But he was not to be seen. Spurring her horse from tree to tree, she gazed with dilated eyes and heaving bosom, but could catch no glimpse of his body. Her heart began to sink within her for fear that she had taken the wrong track—might never find him—might never see him again, even in death!—When she came suddenly upon the tree on which Ardine had been hung.
